Inspiration

"I can't take all the credit."

Humbling isn't it. Painters, photographers, sculptors — they hone their craft in hopes of capturing nature's essence. Their eyes see it, but can their minds and hands recreate it? The vivid colors. The intricately woven tapestry of shapes and textures. The warmth. One visit to a James V. Zizzi custom home and you know he embraces what nature has to offer. He seems to attract clients that feel the same way. His homes, while by no means modest, do not overwhelm their surroundings. Rather, he has an ability to mesh home and environment. Brilliantly, the view outside is not lost from the inside. The awe that is nature can be enjoyed from within.

Some builders merely see the beauty of the East End and the North Shore as a desirable location for the homes they build. James V. Zizzi sees it as the inspiration for his.

William Merritt Chase c. 1878

Saving Chase

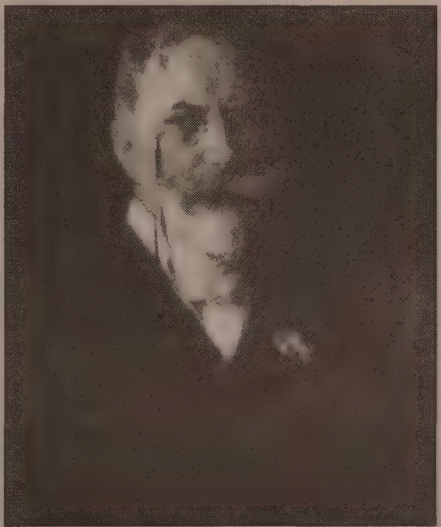
Southampton Could Lose Part Of Its Heritage At Sotheby Auction May19

By Dan Rattiner

The year after painter William Merritt Chase died at the age of 67, some of his patrons and students got together in Southampton and purchased a self-portrait he had painted several years earlier. They gave it to the Rogers Memorial Library in that town, hoping, presumably, that the board of the library would hang it on the wall. In the summertime, when these friends of Chase would come out to their summer homes in Southampton, they would see his portrait and be reminded of the time, a decade earlier, when he ran an art school there. From 1890 to 1902, he ran the Shinnecock Summer School of Art for Men and Women, a school considered the finest in America, rivaled only by the Barbizon in France.

Chase was born and raised in Indianapolis, Indiana, the son of the owner of a shoe store. His art teacher, Barton Hays, thought he was a very talented young man, and suggested that he be sent to New York City to further his studies. The year was 1870. Chase was 20 years old.

After just two years in New York City, and after one of his paintings won a gold medal at the Philadelphia Art Exposition, seven wealthy patrons (Midwesterners who were friends of his family), staked him to an extended tour of Europe. They each put up $300, a considerable sum in that day. In exchange, Chase would paint seven paintings and also work for them, as a buyer of European art that he would ship to them in America. Chase went to Paris, and was so in love with the boulevards and the cafe life that he decided, he later said, that if he was going to get any work done, he'd have to go to a smaller city. He chose Munich, where he learned to paint in the Munich Style — large, lush paintings of still lifes and portraiture. Chase, at first, did not like the style. He called the paintings "dark, terrible things." But he soon mastered the style. And during his seven years in Europe he became celebrated by Europeans for his work.



William Merritt Chase
Self-Portrait, c. 1912

Returning to New York City in 1878, he accepted a post as a teacher at the Art Students League, and he rented a huge, two-story art studio on West 10th Street, which he filled with most unusual artifacts that he said he would use, from time to time, as subjects for his paintings. His hoard included imported material such as a Zulu shield, Italian swords, Japanese fans, East Indian drums, Phoenician glass, a large stuffed flamingo, a bust of Voltaire and 37 Russian Samovars. His paintings began to be collected by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Brooklyn Museum of Art, the Art Institute of Chicago and dozens of others, and many were in private collections. Every Saturday, he would hold open house, when all the well-known artists, writers, actors, models and millionaires would come to his 10th Street studio to spend the afternoon. And in the evening, his parties, many of them costume parties, were legendary. Soon Chase, still in his twenties, had become the talk of the town. And it was said that he knew everybody who was anybody in the art world.

There is a photograph of him, taken when he was 30, that shows a handsome man with piercing eyes, a thick moustache and a beard. He wears a dark suit and lounges informally in a bohemian fashion. There is also a description of him, walking down Fifth Avenue in Manhattan. "He is a gallant gentleman, with mustache slightly tilted, striding down the Avenue wearing a flat brimmed French silk hat, a broad black ribbon hanging from his glasses, and accompanied by a beautiful white Russian wolfhound." He also had a manservant named Daniel with him. Daniel wore a Turkish fez and pantaloons.

One wonders what his father, the shoe store owner, would have thought. Or even what Chase himself thought.

Also in the late 1870s, he and twenty artist friends, including Augustus Saint-Gaudens, Walter Paris, Elihu Vedder and then-artist Stanford White, who would later become an architect, formed "The Tile Club" in New York City. They were a group of young painters who painted on Spanish tile — popular at the time — and spent much of their leisure activities in bars in the Greenwich Village section of Manhattan. In 1877, they persuaded the editors of Scrivner's Monthly to sponsor them on a trip out to the eastern end of Long Island. The magazine was to publish the paintings they made and a diary of their time there. Who had ever been out there?

The Tile Club members packed up their easels and palettes, and, drinking and carrying on as they went, came out on the Long Island Railroad to Sayville, which was as far as the tracks went, and there bought identical straw hats. From there, they went by carriage to Southampton and East Hampton. In Bridgehampton, they found a tailor who sewed identical red ribbons onto their hats. They interviewed the aging Montauk Indian Chief Pharaoh, and, after arranging to stay at a local boarding house (which they famously dubbed "Rowdy Hall") they went out to the fields and set up their easels to paint horses and cows or barns and farmhouses. They painted the mud Main Street of East Hampton. Then they returned to Manhattan, where, soon, their "Tile Club at Play" article dutifully appeared. It was so popular that the magazine published two further installments of their adventures from this trip. Articles about the club members in the Hamptons followed. It is widely believed that because of these articles, the floodgates opened for an entire generation of artists, who came out here to make the Hamptons their home. These included Childe Hassam, Winslow Homer, Thomas Moran and more than two dozen others.

It is of some interest that in an article in a local paper written in 1888, a reporter noted that on several occasions, farmers had to clear easels and canvases from their fields that had been left there from the night before. The reporter also described the all night carryings-on of these "bohemians." They certainly were not assets to the community.

In Manhattan, at the age of 37, William Merritt Chase married Alice, an artists' model he had been living with for several years. She was 20 at the time. The day after their marriage, she gave birth to their first child, a little girl. It indicates that Chase was reluctant to marry Alice, putting it off to the last minute, and perhaps worrying that it would end his life as a bohemian and boulevardier. (It did.) Soon, he was a man with a wife and eight children.

During the next few years, the Chases lived in Manhattan and came out summers to Southampton. In 1892, Stanford White, now an architect, built Chase a large home in Shinnecock Hills. Chase and his family moved in. And Chase would there, in his studio, found the art school for which he would become famous, and at which, it is believed by many, he did his finest work. (Nicolai Cikovsky, Jr., a curator at the National Gallery, declared Chase's paintings to be "some of the most splendidly beautiful and most perfect landscapes ever painted in America.")

Chase took his students out into the empty fields of Shinnecock, and there he taught them all he knew about painting. He had abandoned the style of painting he originally learned in Europe, the formal, dark photo-like portraits and still lifes and, since his foray to the Hamptons earlier, now embraced Impressionism, a school of painting founded in France that involved the painting of the effects of light, atmosphere, water and the dunes. There were American Impressionists painting at the time, most notably Childe Hassam and Mary Cassat, but they were painting in Europe and painting European landscapes. Chase was the first American to celebrate the great American outdoors in this fashion. In the Hamptons, he painted the light shimmering off the bay. He painted fields of flowers and grasses. Among his hundreds of paintings, his Sunset at Shinnecock, painted of his eldest daughter standing in a field in Shinnecock holding a flower in one hand and shading her eyes from the bright sun with the other, is considered among his finest. He did not date any of his paintings made in the Hamptons. But because we know the year his daughter was born, and because she looks about ten, we know it was painted about 1895.

The Shinnecock Art School lasted for twelve years, from 1890 to 1902. It only ended when Chase said he could not continue it. He had founded The Chase School of Art in Manhattan in the wintertime, and though the teachings produced remarkable painters, the school had not done well financially — he was not a businessman —and he had to go on to other things. He closed his 10th Street studio and auctioned off its contents, resigned his post as chairman of the Society of American Painters, which he had founded, and his post as president of the Society of American Artists. His art school was taken over by others — and became the Parsons School of Design. Nevertheless, what Chase did as a teacher became a remarkable legacy. Rockwell Kent was one of his students. Georgia O'Keefe was another. Edward Hopper considered his time there so important that he noted on his business cards that he had been a student of Chase.

In his later years, Chase taught throughout Europe. In 1914, he taught for the summer in Carmel-By-The-Sea, California. He died in 1916 at the age of 67.

For many years, the painting of him that had been donated to the Rogers Memorial Library was kept at the Parrish Art Museum, in the climate controlled basement with the rest of that museum's collection. It would be shown occasionally. But about two months ago, the library decided to sell it. They had decided to establish an endowment for the library, and so they took the painting into New York and had it appraised at Sotheby's. Sotheby's has an art auction coming up on May 19. And they said it could fetch between $80,000 and $120,000. So the library board decided to go ahead.

A week ago, the Parrish Art Museum director, Trudy Kramer, heard about the proposed sale and said it was her opinion, and the opinion of many others, that the portrait of Chase should not leave Southampton. And so last Thursday they made an offer to buy the portrait outright. They will pay the library $100,000 for it. On Monday, the library board replied, rejecting the offer. They want the painting to go to the highest bidder. Someone is going to have to step forward and go to the auction to see to it the painting stays in Southampton.

In researching this article, I came upon a wonderful account of William Merritt Chase, as a young man, in London, arranging to meet an already famous ex-patriot American painter in London, James McNeill Whistler. The two seemed to hit it off, at first. Whistler decided he would call Chase "Colonel." And he suggested, after seeing the young Chase's work, that they paint portraits of each other. But Whistler soon turned on Chase.

"I'm not arguing with you," he said at one point, "I'm TELLING you."

Later, on a train, Whistler became so argumentative that at a brief stop, Chase actually packed up and got off the train to get away.

"A gadfly could not have been more persistently and maliciously annoying," Chase later said.

But Chase got back at him. Although Whistler did not finish his portrait of Chase, Chase did finish his portrait of Whistler. It shows a man standing imperiously tall, looking down at the painter, his index finger balancing on the top of silver handled cane. The painting is inscribed TO MY FRIEND WHISTLER.

"A monstrous lampoon," was Whistler's only comment.

The painting was purchased by the Metropolitan Museum of Art and is there today. It is considered the best portrait of Whistler ever made. •

In The Spring A Man's Fancy Turns To Viagra, Cialis, Levitra And Pretty Girls

By Dan Rattiner

The battle for control of male erections will be heating up in the next few weeks if American ad agencies have their way. Joining Viagra at the pharmacy are Cialis and Levitra, and these two competitors will be running hot and heavy ad campaigns against the market leader. Indeed, they are already biting at Viagra's heels. Used to be Viagra held 100% of the market. Now, in just the last month or two, the Viagra share has dropped to just 80% with the other two holding the remaining 20%. Of course, the total market has grown.

The eating into the Viagra share by Cialis and Levitra is not just because people are curious and want to shop around, but because there are differences in the products. With Viagra, you take a pill and as you probably know, for the next three hours, you are a hot number. This is for males 18 and older. On women it has no effect, though heaven knows the scientists have tried. The conclusion is that because women warm up in a whole different and more complex way, they are immune to Viagra.

So it is probably fair to say that the men who take a Viagra pill just live in hope. The pill takes effect in about ten minutes. After that, the man thinks —I've got three hours to get her going. I still can't figure her out but it can be done. Maybe.

Anyway, three hours gives me a good shot at it.

I am not too clear on what the difference is between Levitra and Viagra because both of them say the effect lasts for the same three hours, but with Cialis, it's scary. It gets you 36 hours. In Europe, where Cialis was first introduced, they call it "le weekend." If you're such a loser that even in three hours you can't get anywhere, you can just tell that to your doctor and he will switch you over to Cialis. Cialis can turn you into a weapon of mass destruction.

I don't know about Europe, but here in America, doctors say that about 1/3 of all adult males experience erectile dysfunction. If true, it's an alarming problem. (And an alarming problem for women.)

Male impotence, it would seem, is right up there with obesity as a serious medical condition.

Well, in reality, it isn't. There is sexual dysfunction and there is not-quite-erectile-perfection. A subtle distinction. What is really going on is that perfectly healthy males who are fine love machines are being turned into excellent

DAN'S PAPERS IS READ BY PEOPLE WHO...

By Dan Rattiner

Newspapers, like dogs, have personalities. Some of them jump up into your lap and lick your face. Others roll around in the mud outside then come in and jump on the sofa. Still others will not hesitate to bite you on the ankle. And so it is that people choose their newspapers, just like they choose their dogs. Or they don't like dogs at all and just sit there and watch TV.

I recently read a description of the different types of readers who read the different daily newspapers.

The Wall Street Journal is read by people who run the country.

The New York Times is read by people who think they run the country.

The Boston Globe is run by people whose parents used to run the country and did so very well, thank you very much.

The Los Angeles Times is run by people who would be happy to run the country if asked, as long as it didn't interfere with their schedules and they didn't have to leave LA.

And finally there was the San Francisco Chronicle. The Chronicle is read by people love machines. They just lie to their doctors.

"So, you are having trouble getting an erection?"

"Yup."

"Here's a prescription for Viagra. That'll fix you up."

Whoooo whee!

There is not, to my knowledge, any physical test that a physician can perform in a brief visit to his office to make a definitive diagnosis of erectile dysfunction. No magazine foldouts and then the doctor will see how you are doing after ten minutes. No females submitting sworn affidavits of dissatisfaction. Just ask the man and take him at his word.

"So, how did that Viagra I prescribed last month work out? Help you some?"

"Yup."

Viagra pills cost $10 each. Oddly, both new competitors charge $10 for each pill, too. If these were the retail prices for competing light bulbs from different manufacturers, it would trigger an investigation about collusion. But it's Viagra, and Congress doesn't want to go there.

As for the battle for men's wallets, or minds, or lower downs, it is interesting to see the different TV and magazine ads created for these products by Madison Avenue.

Early on, Viagra took a subtle approach for its TV campaign. There was the happy man, walking through the halls at work, whistling, a bounce in his step. Out in the parking lot, he says something seductive into the cell phone, laughs, and throws the cell phone up in the air, and catches it. The women in the office, watching this out the window, wonder what is going on with this guy.

Now, in response to the challenge from Cialis and Levitra, Viagra is shifting to a new campaign, one that is still subtle, but not so mysterious. In the newer commercials, men are seen leaping for joy as the rock group Queen plays "We are the Champions." These men have taken Viagra. They are winners.

In the print campaign, men are offered a bargain. Fill six Viagra prescriptions, get the seventh for free. There's a coupon you can clip out.

Levitra has countered with much more of a buckshot approach. They're using celebrity endorsements. "It works for me," says former football star Dick Butkus, pointing menacingly at the camera. If it works for him, it can work for you. They also have a campaign that is almost alarming in its lack of subtlety. A man is seen trying to throw a football through a tire swing. He misses and he misses. Then, by gosh, he gets one through!

Levitra has another TV ad campaign that is a testimonial from a satisfied woman. "Let's just say he notices a difference in the experience — like a 'we should do this more often' difference," she says. "It gives my guy the quality of response that he wants, again and again."

It's been really tough for the agency wrestling with the Cialis campaign. What do you do with a 36-hour sex window? Show a landscape of exhausted, happy women lying on a hillside moaning 'wow?'

Cialis print ads show two old fashioned bathtubs, side by side, facing out onto a beautiful mountain landscape. A man in a bathing suit sits in one bathtub. A woman in a bathing suit sits in the other. They are holding hands, and they are smiling. They've got a 36 hour window. All the time in the world. They can enjoy the moment. No rush. One of these days we'll get around to it.

WILL YOU BE READY? the caption reads. The subtext, for men anyway, is that even if you are the biggest loser in the world, you ought to be able to get it together with her in a day and a half. And if not, just take another Cialis.

In a TV campaign, a man and woman are sitting on the sofa, watching a blazing fire. Apparently, it is "after." The woman looks at the man lovingly, traces her index finger around his ear, then rubs the bald spot on his head. Both of them appear very pleased with themselves.

Sex and procreation are so strange among the creatures on this planet. There are these beautiful, rare tiny birds that normally live in Venezuela. Five years ago, just before mating time, a huge storm blew the entire flock up and out over the ocean and across America to land in some trees in the backyard of this man's house in Vancouver. The birds mated there. Then they returned to Venezuela. And ever since then, just before mating time, every year, they fly to this backyard, stay a week, then go back home. About 3,000 peeping tom birdwatchers with binoculars also flock to Vancouver on that particular week. They hang out in the man's long, winding driveway. This is a true story.

Spiders mate and then the female eats the male.

Dogs mate and as near as I can tell from watching them do this, they have no idea what is going on.

As for humans, the males walk around at the ready anytime, the women require flowers, sappy greeting cards, gifts, talk, poetry, drinks and dinner, diamonds and furs, intimacy, love and kisses and pledges of eternal fealty. And even then, if they still think you're a dork, the sex urge won't kick in.

(Some people say there's cruelty in this. She takes the stuff knowing she intends to dump him. Other people say you can't blame women. They often don't know themselves what they're going to do before they do it.)

And now doctors have found that Viagra is a good drug to treat other illness. One of them is pulmonary hypertension. Trouble is, from an insurance perspective, Viagra is only an approved drug for males over the age of 18 suffering from sexual dysfunction.

Diane Adkins, who suffers from pulmonary hypertension, told the New York Times last week that she takes Viagra for this, and the pills cost her $10,000 a year. So she's considering lying to her insurance company.

"I'm thinking of telling them my doctor is prescribing the pills because I am working toward a sex change," she said.

If you overdose and suffer a side effect — an erection that just won't go away, according to the warnings — there's an antidote. Did you know that? It's been around for a long time, even before Viagra, Cialis or Levitra existed. It's called saltpeter, and it calms down sexual urges. I've never tried it, though I was told at a boy's camp where I was a waiter at 16 that they put it in the soup.

We talked about it. But we waiters agreed we all still felt pretty damn randy, so maybe we were just too tough a job for saltpeter. Typical guy talk. Right? •

2004s First Prize For The Performing Arts Goes To Westhampton Beach PAC

By Dan Rattiner

Ten years ago, Westhampton Beach was a town in trouble. A series of bar fights plagued downtown. The national chain that ran the local movie theatre on Main Street had announced they were going out of business. A rougher, ill-mannered crowd began roaming the streets. As the first Hampton you get to when you come out East, this seemed a shocking development and a harbinger of worse to come.

Local and summer residents fought back. And in what is undoubtedly the biggest and most successful turnaround ever seen on eastern Long Island, Westhampton Beach brought itself back from the abyss to become one of the most stunning and well-run little towns in America.

The rallying point, back then, was the movie theatre, which, as advertised, went out of business. A non-profit organization was formed, and the theatre restored into a masterpiece of 1930s architecture. And then the full scale of the enterprise was revealed. It opened in 1992 as the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center, announcing itself as a venue for dance, music and art. Since then, it has grown and matured. And this year, the scale of the enterprise has simply burst into bloom, bigger than it has ever been before.

Arrangements were made through another non-profit organization anchored by private funds, for the town to secure a large six-acre parcel that stands adjacent to the St. Marks Episcopal Church down at the end of Main Street, just a few hundred yards to the west of the Performing Arts Center. It had been slated for a condominium project, but instead, in late 2001, it became the town green. Main Street is now festooned with flowers from one end to the other during the summer months, ending in the west with the Hampton Square commercial campus development and with the new town green, known as the "Great Lawn" in the east. Which brings us to the summer season of 2004.

On Saturday, June 19, a total of 3000 people are expected to settle in on the Great Lawn to enjoy an "Applauding the Arts" benefit concert for WHBPAC starring Willie Nelson and Family. A warm up band will begin the festivities at 7 p.m. and Willie Nelson will pull a winning entry raffle from a fishbowl, awarding a brand new 2004 Porsche Boxster. Nelson himself will be in performance from 9 to 11.

A tent, with catering by Star Boggs, will be set up for VIPs at one end of the lawn. 500 VIP tickets will be sold for $300 each, granting you access to the tent for a pre- concert party. An additional 2,000 tickets will be sold for $100 for which there will be assigned seating. And 500 tickets will be sold for $50 each, for lawn seating. Bring your own beach chair. As for the Porsche, only 1,000 raffle tickets will be sold, at $100 a ticket. Purchase them at the WHPAC box office.

If the Willie Nelson concert is the premiere offering from WHPAC this summer, the rest of the lineup for the summer, with something going on almost every night, is not too shabby, either.

Friday, July 2, the rock and roll group The Temptations perform. On Saturday, July 31, there is an evening of opera, including a champagne reception and late supper. Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons appear on August 27, Roberta Flack on November 27. Cabaret singer

Vigil

In Sag Harbor, The Women In Black Continue Their Silent Stand

By Cathie Gandel

Despite the wind and rain, twenty-two people gathered last Sunday afternoon for the monthly vigil held by East End Women in Black (EEWIB). Not all were women. Not all were dressed in black. The ages ranged from eight to seventy-five years old. But their message was consistent. "The War Must End" said one placard. Another demanded "Bring Our Troops Home." When asked why she had come out on such an unpleasant afternoon, Janett Elliott replied that, "Somebody has to. I may be uncomfortable but I'm not as uncomfortable as our men and women in Iraq."

EEWIB has been standing in silent vigil at the Long Wharf end of Sag Harbor's Main Street since August 11, 2002. Before the war in Iraq started, the group protested against the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. This was the cause that mobilized a group of Palestinian and Israeli mothers in 1988, the first Women in Black. Now the issues extend way beyond the Middle East, and Women in Black has developed in England, Italy, Spain, and Canada. In the former Yugoslavia, Women in Belgrade have stood in weekly vigils since 1991 to protest that war and the Serbian regime. Women in Black is not a political organization, they are quick to point out. They are an international peace network.

Specific reasons for showing up on Sunday were varied, but in the end, everyone came to support peace and justice.

Why a vigil? Because the original group of Middle East mothers stood at one of the controversial checkpoints to make their protest. Why silent? Because, as the group's literature says, "...mere words cannot express the tragedy that wars and hatred bring. We refuse to add to the cacophony of empty statements that are spoken with the best intentions yet may ... go unheard under the sound of a passing ambulance or a bomb exploding nearby." Why black? Because black is the universal symbol of mourning.

East End Women in Black came about through the coffee shop conversations of a group of friends, all concerned about the direction the U.S. was taking in the Middle East and who felt the need to go public and be counted. Tamar Cole, one of the original group, explained her motivation. "I think it's important to make a stand for your Andrea Marcovicci is showcased on July 10, the Harry James Orchestra on July 25, Poncho Sanchez's Latin Jazz Band on August 7, Hip-hop's Keb' Mo' on July 9, Songbird Stacey Kent on June 25, singer Nellie McKay on July 30, Israeli cafe singer Chava Albertstein on October 23, the Boys Choir of Harlem on December 12, Marshall Crenshaw and Band on August 22, the Peconic Chamber Orchestra on June 26, July 18 and August 8 and that's just the music. There is dance. The Buglisi/Foreman Dance Troupe on July 17, and the acrobatic and sculptural dances of Pilobus on August 21. And there is comedy. Featured performers include Susie Essman, Freddie Roman and Richard Lewis on May 30, July 3 and August 13 respectively. There is something called The Capitol Steps. And the Complete Works of William Shakespeare (Abridged) are to be performed on October 9. There's stuff for kids — Frogz on November 26 for example — and there's blues guitarist G. E. Smith on September 2. There's the ballet Sleeping Beauty in five performances from August 2 to 6, and there's the children's theatre performance of Pinocchio from July 12-16. There are interviews. Puppetry. Juggling. Magic. And on some nights, the place becomes an Independent Movie House.

The entire season, a total of 64 separate evening performance, extends from May 29 to September 4. There is no other facility on the East End, not Guild Hall, not Bay Street, not Vail-Leavitt, not even Southampton College, that offers anything close to this number of professional cultural offerings. And there are another 13 of them between September 5 and January 2. WHBPAC will draw not only from the North and South Forks, but also from the west, with people considering it a major cultural venue from as far away as Nassau County and New York City.

My hat is off to the executive director of this facility, Claire Bisceglia, and her staff. It has been quite a project getting this all in place. And WHBPAC is only 10 years old!

who believe there might not be a country, but if there was one and they were asked, they certainly could run it better than anybody else.

My daughter and her husband live in San Francisco and so I am a frequent visitor to that planet. My daughter last week gave birth to her second child, a little boy they named Rhone, as in the French wine. San Franciscans give names like that to their children. My daughter's daughter, now three, is named Solange, which in French means Sun Angel. There is nothing French about anybody in my daughter's family.

San Francisco really is a great place to live. It is physically beautiful, with great water views everywhere and great architecture. Also, it simply drips with creativity. Or so it thinks. Music. Art. Literature. A recent art exhibit was a series of living room furniture pieces, a sofa, a chair, a table, a piano, all suspended from ropes along the side of a seven story building on the outside, as if some new tenant was moving in and couldn't fit anything into the elevator.

Self absorbed, delighted with itself, and believing itself to be the Capital city of freedom and openness in this country, San Francisco is nevertheless bereft of Nobel Prizes and MacArthur Grants, largely because nobody in town feels the need to enter into competition for any of them. Of course, Rosie O'Donnell married her partner here. And recently when some group offered a prize to the person or group that could build the biggest supercomputer in the world, all of San Francisco turned out. HEY, LET'S BUILD A SUPERCOMPUTER an ad read in a newspaper. Everyone in town was invited to bring an old computer to this high school gym to get it hooked up in parallel. San Francisco intends to win.

One final image. A bum, standing on a center island on the main drag in the city, holds a big sign. It reads BOO! BUSH! People drive by and smile.

Southampton Proposes New Rules For Nightclub Businesses In Town

By David Stoll

Good news for revelers in Southampton: under the Town of Southampton's proposed new rules, to be voted on next week, your favorite nightclub located in a Town residential area may remain open.

Mixed news for homeowners living near nightclubs: the proposed new rules are meant to encourage nightclubs to become better neighbors, by installing soundproofing, ensuring adequate parking and traffic movement, and taking other similar measures, but the enforcement mechanisms provide so many layers of procedure that it might be some time before you see a benefit.

> Unless a representative stands to benefit from a law under consideration, there is no need for recusal.

The Southampton Town Board is attempting to find the right balance in addressing a real problem. Residents living near certain nightclubs, including Jet East on North Sea Road and Brazil on Canal Road, complain about the deterioration of their quality of life as nightclubs have become more popular and louder. If anyone doubts the extent of the potential disruption, take a drive to Brazil or the Beach Bar on Foster Avenue; the proximity of these nightclubs to their residential neighbors in serene areas is surprising. Yet, these and other nightclubs, like our beaches, are an important part of summer life in the Hamptons.

Over many months, Town Supervisor Patrick A. Heaney, along with lawyers and the Southampton Business Alliance, crafted a set of rules that they hope and believe will dramatically improve the quality of life for the residents, while protecting both the business investment of nightclub owners and the ability of their customers to enjoy their Saturday nights during the summer. Given the massive effort that has gone into making the law and the need to change the status quo, the law should pass next week, but it may need to be toughened in coming years.

Basically, the law takes a carrot and stick approach to encourage nightclub owners to add soundproofing and parking, to direct traffic, to reduce lighting where not needed, to improve cleanup of trash, and to provide landscaping that will provide a buffer from the nearby residences. Owners who wish to take these steps will receive zoning variances as needed and then will receive a certificate permitting them to remain open, all without a public hearing. Owners who do not undertake these efforts may find themselves undergoing a complex process intended to give them another chance to take these mitigating steps and that then could require them to close after a certain number of years. Supervisor Heaney explains that nightclubs are encouraged under the law to become better neighbors.

At public hearings, the proposed rules have received heaps of criticism, largely from attorney Patrick Kevin Brosnahan, Jr. on behalf of nightclub owners, but also from some residents. Here are some of the criticisms and the proper responses.

Owners' Complaint 1: this law affects only bars, taverns and nightclubs, but not other types of businesses. Town elected officials are entitled to address those problems that their constituents identify, and need not adopt comprehensive rules with broader implications. Should other businesses have a negative impact on quality of life, publication edited in Paris, and distributed in the big cities of Europe and other places around the world. Written in English, it used to be a celebration of Americans abroad, with small items of things going on back home, large articles on the things to do in Spain or Portugal or London, thoughtful articles on politics, interviews with literary figures abroad and lots of good humor.

The publication had a grand following and its independence allowed it to flourish, because its owners were in a state of impasse. 50% of the stock was owned by the Washington Post and 50% of the stock was owned by the New York Times. So the editors could fashion something totally unique.

I think one might have said this:

The International Herald Tribune is read by people who are quite capable of running the country, but are abroad just now and on vacation, but will be home soon.

Anyway, four years ago, the New York Times bought out the shares of the Washington Post, and today, sadly — or so said the columnist in the New York Magazine article — the newspaper has lost its personality and become a sort of boring, serious publication for "stateless, wandering, international citizens of business. The IHT will be for him and her. (But) it probably isn't going to leap to the forefront of the superheated, up-to-the-minute global economy because its brand says steamer trunks, Idlewild Airport, and, well, Paris.

"But you gotta believe someone will find a business here. As Tuscany becomes a hipper Hamptons, why shouldn't the Herald Tribune be a kind of Dan's Papers? A theme paper to evoke the experience of visiting Europe and distant ports. How depressing is that?"

Lighthouse Day At The Cedar Point County Park In Northwest

By Kelly Krieger

This past Saturday marked the Second Annual Lighthouse Day at Cedar Point County Park in East Hampton. The sun was shining brightly helping to warm the crisp chill from the windy conditions. It was my first time to Cedar Point Park, and I was pleasantly surprised by the vastness of preserved land.

As my friend and I drove along the winding road, giant trees enveloped us on this heavily wooded path. Upon our arrival we visited the first booth at the main entrance and met Mike Seewald, one of the founding members of the Lighthouse Society, and Mark Satensteia, a charter member. Both gentlemen were hard at work and enthusiastic about the prospect of raising more funding for the preservation of the Cedar Island Lighthouse.

The original Cedar Island lighthouse was built in 1839. Before the construction of the lighthouse, "stake lights" were used to help navigate the whaling ships that would travel through the small channel between Cedar Island and Shelter Island. In 1855, the Cedar Island Lighthouse was one of the first lighthouses to be upgraded to have a new multiple lamp and reflector system as well as a single lamp and Fresnal lens. In 1868-1869, a new lighthouse was built using granite blocks.

The Cedar Island Lighthouse is unique in design because of its "L" shape structure, supported by two 33-foot legs and a square tower. In 1882, a fog horn was added to the station. The lighthouse continued service until 1934 when it was decommissioned and replaced with an automated light system that is still in use.

After the hurricane of 1938, the erosion and damage joined the land between Cedar Point and Cedar Island, connecting the island to the South Fork. Suffolk County acquired the lighthouse and land in 1967 making it part of Cedar Point County Park. Unfortunately, in 1974, vandals damaged the lighthouse and the

JENNEMANN IS GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

By Dan Rattiner

On a cold November night in 2002, a Bridgehampton real estate agent named Leslie Jennemann left a cocktail party at an East Hampton restaurant and headed west down the Montauk Highway in her silver SUV. Behind her, in another car, was a man she had just met at the bar, whom she had invited to follow her to her home for a nightcap of sex. Jennemann was driving impaired, according to witnesses.

At the same time, a black man named Henry Yarrell, out from Newark, New Jersey, to work as a migrant worker and earn a few dollars helping with the potato harvest, came out of the Hess General Store in Wainscott carrying a six pack of beer. In spite of the cold, he was on foot, walking along the shoulder of the highway headed toward the migrant worker camp nearby, where he intended to sleep through the night.

The SUV hit Yarrell traveling at a high speed, killing him instantly and throwing his body 165 feet to land along the white line on the shoulder of the road. Jennemann stopped briefly. Her car was a mess, the front end bashed in, the windshield shattered. "Did I hit somebody?" she asked the man following in the car behind her. This man later said he told her he thought she did, though at the trial under oath, he said he wasn't sure what he said. She replied that it must have been a deer, and she drove on, dripping oil from the engine, which police later followed until the trail stopped further down the road.

This past Monday, a jury in Riverhead convicted Ms. Jennemann of second-degree manslaughter, leaving the scene of an accident and failing to stay in a traffic lane. She could receive a prison sentence of up to 15 years.

On each day of the trial, which lasted nineteen days, members of the Yarrell family attended as spectators. They included Ellen Yarrell, Henry's mother, and Crystal Yarrell, his wife and the mother of their three children, ages 13, 4 and 2.

During the trial, the jury learned that movie review: envy

By Dan Rattiner

We went to see the movie Envy the other night, playing at the UA Hampton Bays Cinema. This is a wild, slapstick comedy involving two buddies who work in a sandpaper factory somewhere in California. One of them, a dreamer, works on the factory floor. The other has been promoted to a lower level managerial spot with his own little office. They both have wives and children and they carpool to work every morning.

"Look at my numbers," the manager says. "If you could just focus and get your numbers up, you could have an office just like me."

But the guy who works the floor is just a dreamer.

"I got this idea," he says, on the way to work one morning. "You know how you spill some barbecue sauce onto the table and you put your finger on it and then put it in your mouth? What if you made a stamp pad? One day you could have strawberry in it. Another day steak sauce or butter scotch."

"That wouldn't work," the manager says. "After awhile, because your fingers get dirty, the pad would just get really crummy."

"I suppose so. Wait a minute. I got another idea. You know how people pick up dog poo with a plastic baggie when they take pooch for a walk? What if you could develop a spray? You spray it on, the poo vanishes. How about that?"

The manager agrees that would be great. Later in the movie, given the chance to invest $2,000 for a half share in that project, he declines, and thus loses out in becoming rich beyond his wildest dreams, which his friend, the dreamer, does.

I won't tell you how this movie ends, but I will tell you that after it was over, I and my sons Gabriel and David, and David's girlfriend Jen sat around at a table in 75 Main in Southampton and brainstormed our own ideas.

"I've got a terrific idea," I began. "It'll make a FORTUNE, if we can figure out how to make money out of it. What if we made all the fire hydrants on the Main Streets all over the country ten feet up. On a pipe. The water comes up out of the ground on a pipe anyway. Just extend it up to nine feet."

"You could have all those new parking spaces," Jen said.

"Yes. And the fire trucks already have these overhead buckets that stick out so you could screw on the hoses with those. Even when the parking space is filled. And during a fire, you wouldn't have the problem of worrying about some pranksters unscrewing them."

"Great idea," said Gabriel. "Here's another idea. Have a tiny GPS system attached to everything in the house that you are constantly losing, like your car keys, or your wristwatch or wallet and then have everything tracked by your computer. Click on a particular device. It would draw a plan of your house and blink where it was."

"You'd have a computer in the car, too," I said. "So if you were outside and locked the house you could still locate your car keys inside."

"How would you get in?" David asked.

"A flaw," Gabriel said.

"You know what I hate?" Jen said. "I hate that whenever you take your umbrella out with you it doesn't rain. So you carry this useless thing around."

"Maybe attach a little portable radio to an umbrella," David said.

"I've got a BETTER idea," I said. "How about having that station that is permanently tuned to the weather report on the umbrella."

"What about having an alarm clock that physically throws you out of bed in the morning?" David said.

"How would you do that?"

"I don't know. Maybe it could be part of the umbrella and poke you."

"They have something like that now," I said, "or something you could modify to that. It's called a Murphy bed. Has a hinge by the headboard, you press a button and the foot springs up and the whole bed flattens into the wall. Hook that up to an alarm clock."

"That'll do it," Jen said.

"How about a house made entirely of plastic?" Gabriel said. "Press a button and a powerful metal magnet turns on and everything you keep losing, your car keys and so forth, wham, flies across the room into the magnet."

"Somebody could get hurt," Jen said.

And so it went. Go see this movie. It stars Jack Black, Christopher Walken and Ben Stiller. And bring some friends. If everybody does this, we might solve all the problems of the world, including global warming. •

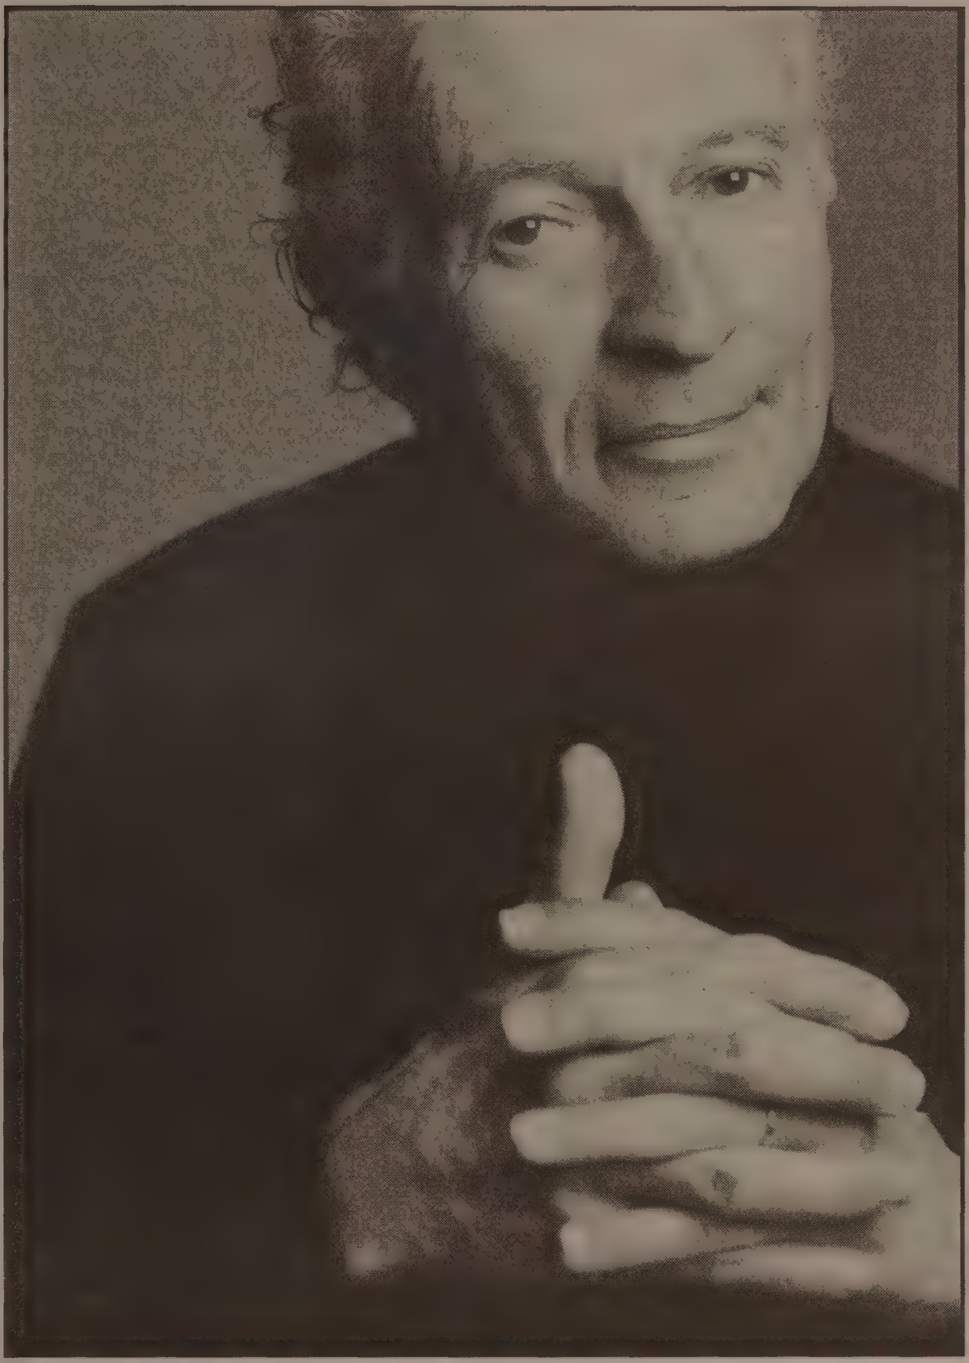
Ron Delsener

Promoter

By Oliver Peterson

East Hampton's Ron Delsener smokes cigars. The famous promoter epitomizes "old New York" with his wise guy wit and sarcastic, sometimes caustic, sense of humor. It's been said that if he whacks you with a good one-liner and you whack him back harder, he might give you some respect. The man who revitalized Jones Beach as one of the greatest outdoor venues can be seen driving around town in his Volvo wagon or 1957 pink T-Bird. He's a fan of the finer things: quality wine, good smokes, and antique automobiles — but it's afforded because he's spent the last 40 years becoming one of the most successful and powerful men in the entertainment industry.

Delsener always fantasized about a life in show business. As a kid, he promoted shows in his basement for 5 cents a ticket, and eventually graduated to work at the Forest Hills Tennis Stadium in Queens for $75 a week. The kid who papered the streets of Flushing, Queens with leaflets for his benefit concerts for high school and church clubs made it big in 1964. The first of his several groundbreaking ideas took shape in the form of the outdoor concert. It's a commonplace thing today, but at the time few were doing it. Delsener came up with the concept from practical thoughts.



c. Carol Friedman

"You didn't have to pay for air-conditioning. Kids were out of school. And with the exception of the Hollywood Bowl and maybe one or two other places, no one else was doing this," he said to a standing-room-only crowd in JMNH, in 2002. On August 28th and 29th of 1964, he co-produced the Beatles' first outdoor concerts in New York, selling out 32,000 seats in Forest Hills. Leslie West of the rock group Mountain described the momentous effect the show had on him. "I saw the Beatles at Forest Hills Tennis Stadium in 1964. I remember them pulling away in a helicopter and I saw their cigarettes in the helicopter, all four of them, and it looked awfully cool, what they were doing. [I was with] my brother and all the other guys in the Vagrants, we were a group, but we weren't really. But after that we got serious." Hopefully we have more to thank Mr. Delsener for than the birth of Mountain, but West's moment of clarity is one good example of what kind of impact Ron Delsener's first major success caused.

With the Beatles show behind him, Delsener pitched another outdoor concert idea to the Central Park commissioner in 1965. The mainstay attraction of the summer, "Concerts in the Park," began that year in Wollman Rink. For 15 years the series ran with low ticket prices, first capped at $1 and later for free, and had such bands as The Who, Neil Diamond, and Louis Armstrong. The free tickets were possible due to Delsener's second huge idea. Before Ron Delsener, there never was such a thing as corporate sponsorship for music events. This crucial part of events began with his deals with companies like Rheingold beer and the Ford Motor Company as underwriters. Love it or hate it, Delsener is the man to thank for those so-called anti-establishment "punk" bands, like Good Charlotte, being sponsored by major corporations like Honda. For this, Delsener sometimes laments. With all his big business and his love of a profit, he still seeks out talent and uses a hands-on approach that doesn't always click with the world of executives and focus groups. In an article dated before they exploded, Delsener casually mentioned that he was keeping his eye on a band called the Strokes. The man has instinct.

He even found a way to bring his magic here. In 1998, he produced a series of concerts at our own Guild Hall, and funded it by getting his powerful friends and local businesses to jump on board as underwriters. One local mega-millionaire reportedly shelled out $35,000, the same amount that Rheingold gave for Barbara Streisand in the early years. The shows benefited Guild Hall and included memorable performances by Willie Nelson, Billy Joel, Elvis Costello, Ray Davies of The Kinks, and Rickie Lee Jones. Unfortunately, the series has not continued.

More recently, Delsener and his Delsner/Slater Company grew into a massively lucrative venture and was eventually bought up by SFX Entertainment, which was then acquired by Clear Channel. Clear Channel Communications generates over $3 billion in revenues annually.

He has supported local radio and up and coming bands for years. He has said that due to a modern version of the outlawed "payola" (paying stations to play songs), new talent does not get a fair shot. That's why he hails college radio, citing Fordham University's station as one example of an exciting sound.

Ron Delsener has involved himself in numerous charities with efforts including the No-Nukes Concert, Tribute to Nelson Mandela, Eric Clapton's Crossroads Rehabilitation Center in Antigua, Earth Day, Tribute to John Lennon, the removal of Millstone Nuclear Power Station, and of course, Guild Hall. But for the man who's had his hand in most major concerts you might remember — it seems to be about the music. •

the Town may address them separately in a way that makes sense in light of the particular problems, which may be unrelated to noise, traffic and litter.

Owner's Complaint 2: the law is unconstitutional. While the Town of Southampton will surely be tied up in litigation as a result of this law, its constitutionality is beyond question. New York City and Islip both adopted far more restrictive zoning laws and those laws survived challenges. Nightclub owners need only take steps to mitigate negative effects on the residential neighborhood.

Owners' Complaint 3: the Town will never accept an owner's effort to adopt mitigation measures, so it is only a question of time before the hammer falls. The law contains great specificity as to the types of mitigation measures that are favored and also provides numerous layers of procedural protection for owners. There is no reason to assume that the law will be applied arbitrarily. If it is, lawsuits will follow.

Owners' Complaint 4: Supervisor Heaney has a conflict of interest because he is a member of the Southampton Business Alliance, which had input in crafting the law. In fact, the Southampton Business Alliance's principal contribution was to make the law more flexible. The owners likewise were invited to make suggestions, but their lawyer Mr. Brosnahan flatly refused, claiming that he would "oppose this piece of garbage." More generally, all of our representatives had lives and affiliations before they were elected; that is a good thing. Unless a representative stands to benefit from a law under consideration, there is no need for recusal. Of course, if the voters do not like a representative's affiliations, they may make their feelings known at the ballot box.

Residents' complaint 1: the law allows a nightclub that is ordered to shut down too many years (10) to recoup its investment. The "amortization" period is an important part of the law; without it, the law would be vulnerable to legal challenge. It is important that the law give owners that must close a full opportunity to recoup their investment. Moreover, the ten year period is a maximum period; it is possible that a particular nightclub will be given far less time to close, based upon many specific factors set forth in the law.

Residents' complaint 2: the law contains too many loopholes and procedural mechanisms, rendering it a "paper tiger". This complaint may be valid. A nightclub owner who does not wish to be a good citizen has lots of time to continue to operate as is. Consider the steps that are required before the nightclub can be ordered to shut down: (1) the Chief Building Inspector, having determined that a nightclub needs to be closed, must seek an advisory report from the Town Planning Board, (2) the Chief Building Inspector then must seek approval from the Town Board; (3) then, if the owner says he will behave, he or she has six months and in some cases a year to implement mitigation measures; (4) only then may the Chief Building Inspector issue an order closing the nightclub and setting forth the number of years the nightclub has to amortize; and (5) after that, the owner may appeal to the Zoning Board of Appeals, which will hold a public hearing. After all that, litigation can follow.

Likewise, just as the owners claim to be concerned that no mitigation measures will suffice, some residents are concerned that inadequate mitigation measures will be tolerated.

Despite the legitimacy of the residents' concerns, the fact is that most bars, taverns and nightclubs are good citizens, and it is expected that they will avail themselves of the voluntary processes (the carrot) offered in the law. Most complaints over the years have involved the same few bad actors. As for those owners, it is true that the law may be ineffective, particularly this season. However, the bad actors surely see the writing on the wall. The East End towns and villages are becoming much tougher than in the past. Indeed, as a result of enforcement actions, Rocco's in Sag Harbor may no longer operate as a nightclub, and Jet East in Southampton may not be able to open for Memorial Day Weekend. So, even the bad neighbors may decide it is in their interest to change their ways. That would be good for everyone — partygoers and residents alike.

So the Town should pass the law. Doing so will send a message and start a process. The Town Board will be watching, as will the residents living near nightclubs. If the law requires additional teeth, they can and will be added later. Meanwhile, the Town needs to continue enforcing the related laws against illegal shares, as the negative effects associated with some nightclubs can migrate to a house after 4 a.m. •

ALS AT DUCK WALK VINEYARDS

The 2004 7th Annual Ride for Life - Manhattan to Montauk begins its yearly journey toward a cure for ALS on May 7-16. A kick-off party was held at Duck Walk Vineyards in Southampton, where there was a wine tasting with gourmet food, a silent auction and a spectacular array of fireworks by Bay Fireworks. A special thanks to Bill Martin for his work in making this year's event a huge success. ALS patients, their friends, and care givers will ride their electric wheel chairs from Manhattan to Montauk Point on two consecutive weekends to raise funds and create awareness for ALS. Every 90 minutes a patient dies from ALS, better known as Lou Gehrig's disease. PLEASE HELP. For information on Ride for Life call Jennifer Lowy at 212 355-3880 or Jennifer@rideforlife.com

RICHARD GERE HONORED

Last Tuesday, at the Waldorf, the American Museum of the Moving Image saluted Richard Gere for his work in films. It was a black tie, star-studded event, with a red carpet sparkling with celebrities. Sharon Stone was gorgeous and she introduced Richard Gere. Famed director Garry Marshall was especially funny. Most of the celebrities there were Hamptonites, too, including Richard Gere and Carey Lowell, Kim Cattrall and Harvey Weinstein. From his first part as a one-night-stand guy in Looking for Mr. Goodbar to his films more than twenty years later, Richard Gere was, is and will always be a sexy man.

interior was destroyed by fire, and it sat in the same poor condition until 2001.

Finally, in 2001, the Suffolk County Parks Department with the assistance of the Lighthouse Society began plans to restore the lighthouse and an agreement of stewardship was put into action. In the fall of 2002, the lighthouse was put on the National Register of Historic Places to be improved.

And so, the restoration project began and will continue to be supported through events and funding. The future of the lighthouse depends on the preservation and restoration of its structure. The only way to guarantee this lengthy dedicated process is through financial support. Which brings us back to the success of events such as the Annual Lighthouse Day.

This year's Lighthouse Day was filled with live entertainment, historical displays, educational activities and walks to the lighthouse. Along our journey we met up with United States Coast Guard Chief Anthony Certa who was with his wife, Alma, and infant son, Ronan. Chief Certa is in charge of the Coast Guards ANT Unit. This unit is located in Hampton Bays and maintains all the lighthouse beacons and day marks (day beacons) from East Rockaway to Montauk Point. On display was a red light that is used by many lighthouses across the country. I asked if Ronan could stand next to it, with the assistance of his parents, to see the size comparison. Well, I'm sure by next year Ronan will have grown a few inches, but today he was not quite there yet.

Our next stop was the beach. We walked along the dirt path down towards the rocky beach that eventually leads the way to the lighthouse. The wind prevented us from continuing on the walk, but we promised each other we would come back on another day when we were wearing better walking shoes. It was a great day for kite flying, however, and there were a few families doing just that.

On the way back towards the entrance we made two more stops at different booths that displayed beautifully hand-carved wooden birdhouses made to resemble a lighthouse. Another booth offered colorful posters of all the famous lighthouse signed by a few remaining lighthouse keepers. I had to purchase one; after all, the proceeds will benefit the future of the Cedar Island Lighthouse restoration project. And it will look great on my wall.

It's an important duty of our society to preserve and maintain our land and historic structures such as lighthouses. Whether you're interested in becoming a volunteer by joining the Lighthouse Society or want to show your support by attending fundraising events, everyone can get involved.

For more information on Cedar Point Lighthouse or to make a donation, please contact the Long Island Chapter, P.O. Box 744, Patchogue, NY 11772 or call 631-207-4331 or log onto www.lilighthousesociety.org • beliefs within your own community, where people know you," she said. "You can't be anonymous."

The focus changed as the Iraq war became a reality. Public response is now mostly positive, but that was not always the case. The Sag Harbor Express reported that, at the height of the war, over 200 people gathered at Long Wharf stimulating a counter demonstration at the other end of Main Street. Now the noise from car horns is usually accompanied by a thumbs-up gesture.

Specific reasons for showing up on Sunday were varied, but in the end, everyone came to support peace and justice. Some of the participants had a history of civil disobedience. One man had protested during the Vietnam War. Another has been supporting causes of peace and justice since he was six years old. "If you're not outraged by what's going on, then you're not thinking," said Sigrid Meinel. Carolina Agudelo, a freshman at the State University of New York at Old Westbury, said she comes because, "We are all human beings." Dan Steiner, another long time member, said that, "We need to be in the streets. We need to be visible to the local, national and international communities."

One woman held a sign that said "Dissent is Patriotic." Larry Darcey seconded that thought. "We come from different ethnicities, religions, and economic groups and we are all trying to combat the message that has been drummed into us, namely 'support your government right or wrong,' he said. "We want to send the message that it's not unpatriotic to protest against injustice."

"The Quakers have been supporting peace testimony since the mid 1600s," Joanna Komoska, the clerk of the Quaker meeting in Southampton, pointed out. She supports EEWIB because, "All war is an abomination." Last year, Komoska hosted one of the Israeli women who founded the original Women in Black and invited her to the Sag Harbor vigil. "She was very moved to be in what was for her an international setting of Women in Black, to see how the network has spread," Komoska said.

While EEWIB will continue to keep their silent vigils in Sag Harbor, the group is also concerned with other injustices. Gerry Mooney, the manager of three affordable housing complexes in East Hampton, sees a connection between EEWIB and the work he does. "It's about the amount of money spent on the military that could be better spent for human needs," he said. "People in this country, in this community, can't find housing and don't have their basic needs met. This is injustice too."

"We want to make it impossible for people, in our community at least, to say — as has been said so many times in the past, 'I didn't know,'" said Tamar Cole. To that end, EEWIB will be carrying their message in Sag Harbor on the first Sunday of each month, silent but impossible to ignore. •

Jennemann and her male companion had continued on to her house, leaving Yarrell dead and bloody, and that the next morning, Jennemann drove her car to a body shop for repairs. She said that she hit a deer, and asked the shop owner to fix it. The body shop, already on the lookout for a damaged silver SUV because of a police bulletin, kept the car and called the authorities. The impact had been so great that an imprint of Yarrell's jeans was clearly visible on the smashed hood of the car.

Jennemann, at the trial, stuck to her claim that she thought she hit a deer. As the trial progressed, on several occasions while others were testifying, Jennemann would roll her eyes or sigh or giggle, bringing a series of rebukes from Judge Doyle.

At the announcement of the verdict, Jennemann began to weep. But the judge denied bail to Jennemann and she was taken from the courtroom in handcuffs to await sentencing.

"This defendant has now been convicted of manslaughter," the judge said, explaining his ruling on bail. "A man died as a result of this defendant's actions."

Leaving the courtroom, Henry Yarrell's mother also wept. "Thank you Lord, thank you Jesus," she cried. "I know now my son did not die in vain." •

The Sheltered Islander

By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander # 297

"What Can Brown Do For You?" (UPS commercial)

Mother's Day is coming. Those of us who are in the trenches know that there won't be any justice until the kids are out on their own, trying to make $1200 in pay cover $1500 of monthly expenses.

I expect to be given beautiful cards on Mother's Day, filled with dripping sentiments that remind me why I am not a priority in my own life. I expect to receive touching and meaningful gifts that I can treasure for years to come. I expect to be pampered all day. I expect lobsters, alive and kicking, to appear in a pot near me. I expect my lobsters to be served to me by Russell Crowe, wearing nothing but a koala. I expect that Russell will have stuffed emerald and diamond jewelry in my lobster. I expect to be stuffed that evening with the stuff dreams are made of. I also expect I'll wake up before anything really good happens in my dream...

There's a chance I might get a card and the effects of the moment will last for, oh, I dunno, a moment. Then it will be business as usual.

"Mom! Nagging is not considered a parenting skill! Can I have a little money?"

"I don't know where the keys are! That's where I left them, you must have moved them. I think you have Alzheimer's, Mom!"

"There's nothing wrong with weed! Katie's parents smoke with her and they have a lot more money than we do! Can I have a little money?"

"I'm gonna do my homework, okay? Just chill! Geez!"

"Why do I have to do dishes? I only made three of these dishes!"

"I just don't like your cooking! Can I have a little money?"

"It's just a phone bill, Mom! Don't have a freakin' cow! I'll get a job and pay you back, okay? Can I have a little money?"

"Her parents bought her a new car! All my friends have cars! I'm the only one still walking around town!"

"A job is not going to interfere with my grades! I can handle it! I have to be able to work more than fifteen hours a week!"

"Nobody's hiring anywhere. Can I have a little money?"

"Stop talking to my teachers! I hate it when you do that! Stop interfering in my life! Can I have a little money?"

"I don't know where your [circle all that apply] good comb / good hair clip / eyebrow tweezers / pads / nail polish remover / watch / socks / conditioner / big coffee cup/ are! And I don't know where all the towels are, either! The towel fairy took them along with the sock fairy when he came for the socks! Can I have a little money?"

"I said I would go online and do the practice SAT's now leave me alone!"

"The only entertainment in your life is my life! Why don't you get out and get a life? Can I have a little money?"

"I am very responsible! I do everything around here!"

"There's only a chance in a million of getting a summer scholarship, Mom! I'm not gonna spend an entire evening writing an essay for something I'll never get, that's stupid!"

"It's from Brown University! Oh my God Mom! Oh Mommy, I'm accepted! I got the scholarship! I can't believe it! How did this happen?"

Big Event of the Week

North Fork Chorale Performs Jerome Kern

Jerome Kern wrote about 700 songs and more than 100 complete scores for shows and films in a career spanning nearly fifty years, from 1902 until his death in 1945. He began performing in New York as a rehearsal pianist, but it didn't take long for him to become a prominent and renowned composer. In 1925 Kern met Oscar Hammerstein, and their famous collaboration yielded many classics, including Ol' Man River, The Last Time I saw Paris, and The Way You Look Tonight, which won the Academy Award in 1936 for Best Song.

Composer Jerome Kern

The North Fork Chorale, currently celebrating its 68th year of performing vocal music for members of the community, held its first concert at Mattituck High School in 1936. The Chorale was featured on a radio broadcast at the 1939 World's Fair, and in 1941 the renowned composer Benjamin Britten joined them as a guest pianist. Recently referring to itself as "members of the community offering the joy of music to the whole community," the fifty odd members that make up the all-volunteer group come from hamlets ranging from Calverton to Orient. No auditions are required. A love for singing is all that's asked for. The Chorale's Spring 2004 Concert series, featuring a medley of show tunes by Jerome Kern and an offering of selected American spirituals, concludes this weekend with performances at 8 p.m. Saturday night at Mattituck Presbyterian Church, and 3 p.m. Sunday afternoon at Southold Methodist Church. No advance reservations are required. Tickets, $7, are available at the door.

The Link Between Golf And Wine

New North Fork Club Brings Together Two World Class Industries

By Roy Bradbrook

The area around Riverhead – from Wading River to Laurel – is rapidly becoming the golfing center of Long Island, and the latest addition, the Olde Vine Golf Club development, is going to accentuate that trend. On some 130 acres just off Reeves Avenue in Riverhead, some major earth moving, terrain shaping, and grass sowing have been in progress for the past year.

Bruce Barnet and John Blaney, two well-known property developers on Long Island, are the majority partners in this venture, which, they say, started rather as a pipe dream.

"Bruce and I are both keen golfers and once while we were playing at Cherry Creek, we started to talk about what it would be like to own a golf course," John Blaney explained. "Then we happened to see that some land close to The Woods at Cherry Creek course was for sale. That is how we came to be in the business of developing Olde Vine Golf Club and Estates."

This is a very simplistic version of what turned out to be three years of hard work to clear all the permitting requirements.

"We were determined to have a very strong environmental approach," said Blaney. "This land could have been subdivided into 110 building plots, but we decided to go for only 75 plus the golf course. The Town of Riverhead was helpful and appreciated that the blend of houses and golf course was good for the Town."

When it came to the selection of an architect for the course, the partners knew William "Buddy" Johnson's style from some of his other courses at Great Rock and Mill Pond, and they liked his approach. Even better, it turned out that Buddy loved the scope of the project, and the Olde Vine course has been designed by him to be a challenge to all levels of golfing skills.

The course will be relatively short at 5630 yards from the back tees, but every hole has been designed to make players think hard before hitting. Ed Wankel is a name very well-known in golfing circles and will always be linked to the victorious negotiations that brought the 2002 U.S. Open to the Bethpage Black Course. He is the president of Long Island Golf Management, Inc., which has responsibility for the sales of memberships and the golf course management at Olde Vine.

"There are too many courses where hole after hole feels the same," said Wankel. "Not here at Olde Vine because of the subtleties of hole design, the bunkering – there are over 85 of them – and the raised and undulating greens. Then there is the ever-changing wind on this treeless links-like terrain that brings its own element of unpredictability into play. There are five par 3's from 125 to 186 yards and they vary in direction and difficulty, so golfers at all skill levels will have to play well to score net pars."

The care of the Olde Vine course will be in the very experienced hands of course superintendent Greg Dickenson, formerly of North Fork Country Club. John Gatta, who was assistant professional at the Inwood Golf Club, has been appointed golf professional at Olde Vine. Ed Wankel waxed lyrical during our meeting about the way John had already quickly helped him improve his swing and scores just from a few tips!

Apart from the delights of playing the Olde Vine course, members will receive a very unusual bonus.

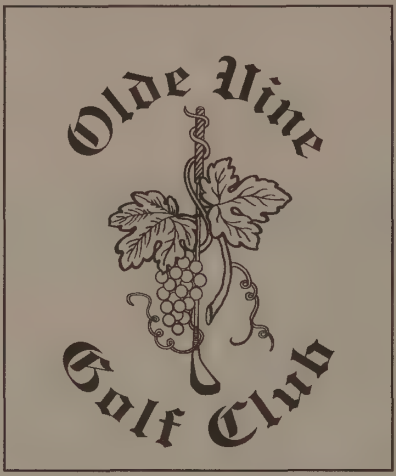
"Because the Olde Vine course is so close to the two Cherry Creek courses and because we already had very close personal relationships with the owners, we concluded a licensing arrangement with them which allows our members to have playing privileges there with reserved tee times and no green fees," Blaney explained. "We believe that, when it comes to golf, most golfers can never get enough, so this is really a very special 54-hole offer of golf on three very different courses, even though they are so close geographically. Cherry Creek Golf Links is long at just under 7200 yards, with wide fairways, and The Woods at Cherry Creek course really is in the woods with mature oak, pine and beech trees, and plays to 6,500 yards over some rolling terrain."

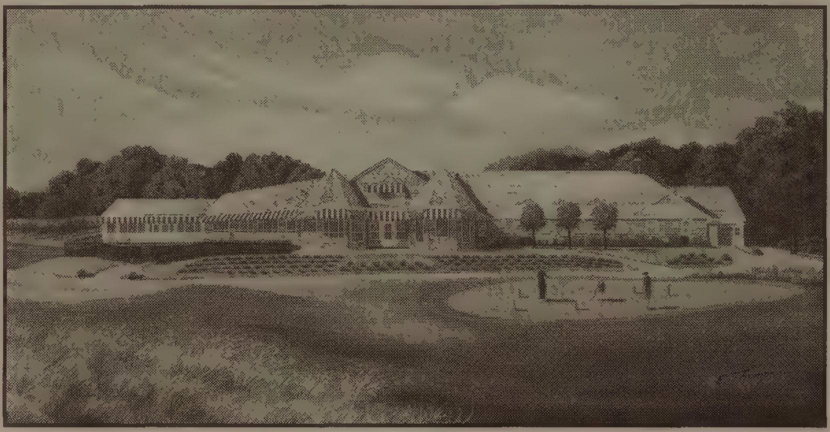
A golf club would be incomplete without a club house, not simply for changing but also for the (sometimes) best part of the round when, in a convivial atmosphere, good shots are talked about and bad things of the round are conveniently forgotten. The clubhouse at Olde Vine has been designed by the firm of Hart & Howerson, which was responsible for the design of the clubhouses at Atlantic (in Bridgehampton) and Winged Foot. The building will be very spacious, with all of the facilities one would expect of a prestigious private club.

An important aspect of conviviality is the availability of good food, and members and prospective members who love good food will certainly be excited to hear that the Olde Vine management is having discussions with John Ross, one of the region's legendary toques, to explore the possibility of his becoming the club's private chef. Naturally, where there is good food there has to be good wine, and this is where the name of the course becomes very appropriate.

John Blaney told me that while walking around the newly acquired site with Bruce Barnet, they were tossing possible names to and fro until they came across some old wild grapevines, hence Olde Vine. They also decided to go a stage further and to plant grapevines on two acres of the land fronting the club and also on another twenty acres they own in Northville.



The Olde Vine Golf Club logo



The future clubhouse at Olde Vine

In collaboration with Teresa Ackerman, owner of Manor Hill Vineyards, a Bordeaux-style blend red will be produced by master winemaker Eric Fry at the Premium Wine Group facility in Mattituck under the striking Olde Vine wine label, which features a "vintage" golfer. It has been specially designed for the club by Nidea Corporation, a national design and marketing firm specializing in the wine industry.

Naturally, all of this golfing luxury does come at a price, but by Long Island standards, the price is remarkably reasonable for what members receive.

"This could well be the last private course built on Long Island," Ed Wankel commented. "There are so few parcels of suitable land left and the economics of running a golf course, even with housing on the site, puts a ceiling on just what land costs can total for a club to be viable long term."

The membership here is limited to a maximum of 399 and all will have equity membership, so the course eventually will be owned and run by the members. Purchasers of houses at Olde Vine receive priority for membership and there are also corporate, general and social membership levels. For the initial offering, general membership costs $30,000 and annual fees have been set at $3,750 for singles and $4,950 for family membership. These will almost certainly rise as time goes on, based on what has happened at other clubs in this region.

The battle over the best use for land in this delightful part of the world seems destined to go on for a long while yet. No solution is likely to be perfect and to please everyone. Olde Vine Golf Club has been designed to incorporate housing, leisure activities, social amenities and wine production. It is a good model of foresight, enterprise and care for the environment.

ART COMMENTARY

By Marion Wolberg Weiss

Members Show At Guild Hall

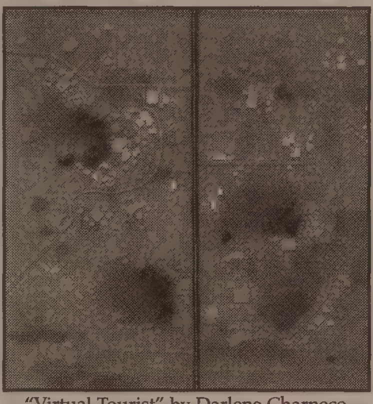
Anyone seeing the annual Members Show at Guild Hall is sure to marvel at how so many works can be effectively displayed in the two galleries. But curator Christina Strassfield and her staff have done it again, giving meaning and respect to each piece.

Yours truly is not as competent in this regard. That is why we will focus only on the winners (and not all of them at that). We apologize for such a perspective; there are plenty of fine works which will not receive an interpretation in print.

It seems that many current winners share a common penchant for space and its ability to join or divide diverse realms of reality: real vs. virtual; dream vs. reality; one place/time vs. another. Admittedly, such an interpreted construct is probably only shared by this critic. And, naturally, it doesn't apply to all the pieces getting awards.

Darlene Charneco's Best Mixed Media work, "Virtual Tourist," establishes the standard, making connections between the real world and cyber space. According to the artist herself, this bond signifies her own journey and experience with the internet. While the artist's "mapping" configurations are not necessarily new, they are used in a different and arresting way this time around.

The fact that the two spaces create a hybrid form is an important idea, inviting the question: Will cyber space and reality ever become one? Right now, we'll leave it to the sci-fi media to develop this premise.



"Virtual Tourist" by Darlene Charneco

Audrey Lee's Best Representational Painting also explores different spaces as overlapping planes envelop and define a female figure. The work suggests the changing and evolving persona of the artist herself, but we may be mistaken in that observation.

Mary Antczak's Honorable Mention features red and blue overlapping planes as well, but this device fragments the woman's image, implying well- articulated and established disorientation, one that's not in process.

Space that delineates diverse times (past and present) is operating in Rae Ferren's Honorable Mention, "See What I Saw." Here, we imagine that the young girl is looking at her memories represented by an ill-defined image in the background. It's a good analogy for how we recall the blurry past.

Judith Uehling's Honorable Mention deals with diverse places instead: a living room on one side and two men on the other. Are they displaced from the physical space or does each space signify a different time period? It's an intriguing question.

Luiz Coelho's Honorable Mention features found metal objects which not only contribute to a human form, but one that is also composed of hard, sharp items. Humanity and technology are joined. Is this another kind of hybrid space?

The show at East Hampton's Guild Hall will be on view until mid June.

HONORING THE ARTIST: MAXWELL SMITH

While this week's cover, "Toweling Off," may be an homage to nostalgia and turn-of-the-century beach scenes, its artist, Southampton resident Dinah Maxwell Smith, is very much a modern woman: adventurous, risk-taking and energetic. In a word, she likes "breaking rules."

Ms. Smith's love of animals is also legendary; she currently has three dogs, five cats and a horse that she boards in Bridgehampton, all of which keep her "on overload." The dogs, especially, are a real sight to behold: two poodles and a huge Rhodesian Ridgeback.

One never knows what Ms. Smith will do on any given day or where she will be, for that matter. For example, this summer she plans on renting a place in Taos, New Mexico. A few years ago she entertained the idea of teaching art in Montana. "I'd also like to explore California or spend the summers in Nova Scotia," Ms. Smith says with resolve. We tend to agree with her when she says she'd like to spend the winters away from the Hamptons, perhaps in Arizona. Meanwhile, Ms. Smith continues to create her signature beach images done in what could be described as an impressionistic style. Her taste in art, however, is diverse, including far-ranging styles and time periods. " I believe Sargent is the most skilled of all the artists," she says with conviction, "but I also like Edward Potthast, Priscilla Bowden and Eric Fischl.

"Sargent does what I can't or won't do."

What Ms. Smith does do is just as varied as her favorite artists, producing not only beach scenes but images of animals, for example. Currently, she's working on a painting of a friend sitting atop a pony. She'd also like to create one featuring her horse, Scamper.

Ms. Smith is enchanted with boxes as well, having created pieces over the years for The East End Hospice's Annual Auction. This year she's at work also doing a box for The Retreat. We asked about her attraction for boxes. "I like the idea of space, of three - dimensionality. Boxes also remind me of theatre sets," she answers with characteristic vigor.

Working with different scales such as boxes is something Ms. Smith has a particular affinity for. "I love mixing scales," she explains. "For example, I found a partial roll of wallpaper with huge roses. I glued it on a board, putting in a small window. Then I set a light behind the object."

Ms. Smith doesn't always combine big and small objects, however. Her dollhouses, obviously, are small-scaled, as are her boxes; in fact, we can see a similarity between the two structures. Miniature worlds created from the artist's imagnation and real experiences.

Whatever Ms. Smith's current project may be, it's apparent that inspiration is on her side. She puts it most succinctly when she says, "I won't work for the sake of working. My muse has to be with me."

Ms. Smith's work can be seen at Hampton Road Gallery.

theatre review: caroline or change & bombay dreams

...by gordin & christiano

The last two weeks have been a busy period for Broadway openings, with no less than five shows making their debuts on the Great White Way, just under the wire for this week's cut off for Tony Award consideration. There apparently appears to be something for everyone…no matter what your taste.

Caroline or Change, Tony Kushner and Jeanine Tesori's new musical starring Tonya Pinkins, opened Sunday following its sold out critically acclaimed run at The Public Theatre. The show scored six Drama Desk Award Nominations (all in major categories) this past Thursday. We didn't see it at the Public, but in its new home at the Eugene O'Neill Theatre, I can assure you it's a stunning achievement. The musical is a passionate and intelligent tale, a moving triumph for all involved. However, the show constitutes a big risk as a bleak story about a black maid set in 1963 Louisiana at the time of the civil rights movement and encompassing the period of President Kennedy's assassination. It is not exactly what one usually associates with popular musical theatre or Broadway. Add to that the fact that the story is almost completely sung and you have what could be considered a new musical theatre form.

Tonya Pinkins as Caroline Thibodeaux

In the lead role, Tonya Pinkins plays Caroline Thibodeaux, a poor, black, single mother with four children. She is a stern disciplinarian, a church- going woman, who has worked hard to sustain herself and her family. She is employed by a Jewish family with one son. The child's mother has died and his father has recently remarried. The plot hinges on the loose change the young boy leaves in pants pockets, which Caroline finds while doing the laundry. The story's many conflicts evolve and resonate from this simple, yet brilliant plot device, which is also the "Change" of the author's title and is significant of Caroline's struggle to change.

Ms. Pinkins gives a boldly committed performance, refusing to sentimentalize the character. In fact she does just the opposite, almost stressing her disagreeable characteristics and demonstrating how Caroline has come to rely upon them for her survival. The result is profoundly sad, as we increasingly become aware of her sacrifices and are deeply moved by her plight. The performance is a towering accomplishment, which will not easily be forgotten by anyone who witnesses her tremendous talent.

George C. Wolfe has directed with grace and vision, surrounding Ms. Pinkins with some amazingly gifted actors and singers. Anika Noni Rose as her rebellious eldest daughter, Emmie, is a particularly compelling presence and possesses a powerfully crystal clear voice to match her effective portrayal. Chandra Wilson is tough and endearing as her best friend. David Costabile and Veanne Cox as her employers, Stuart and Rose Gellman, turn in fantastic work. In fact, every member of the cast is a stand-out, even those in the smaller roles. They include (in no particular order) Capathia Jenkins, Tracy Nicole Chapman, Marva Hicks, Ramona Keller, Harrison Chad, Chuck Cooper, Alice Playten, Reathel Bean, Aisha de Haas, Chuch Cooper, Leon G. Thomas III, Marcus Carl Franklin, and Larry Keith.

Caroline or Change is a story with great depth and Tony Kushner's lyrics are highlighted by Jeanine Tesori's imaginative score, which is an amalgamation of different styles encompassing R&B, gospel, pop, and classical. Her music here is probably her finest to date. She doesn't try to astonish you, but instead casts a spell over you that draws you into the world of the play, allowing you to live there and feel for its people. There is a haunting sadness which lingers here, so expect to be moved. That is, after all, the purpose of outstanding theatre isn't it?

On the other hand, Andrew Lloyd Webber's $14 million dollar musical, Bombay Dreams, which opened this past Thursday, couldn't be more of a contrast. Hardly original or engaging, it is however a dazzling spectacle that asks nothing of you except to sit back and be entertained. In fact, you are requested to check your intelligence at the door and marvel at the glitzy costumes and beautiful sets all done in brightly colored purples, greens, golds, pinks and orange. The show is literally a rainbow delight of color with 39 performers dancing and careening about the stage along with a 32 jet fountain that spurts water at least 20 (maybe even 30) feet into the air.

The show, which arrived direct from London's West End where it was a hit despite many of the critics, has already garnered four Drama Desk Award Nominations and is hoping to do even better when the Tony Award Nominations are announced later this month.

Bombay Dreams, a predictable love story about a young slum-dweller, Akaash (Manu Narayan) and his dream of becoming a Bollywood (India's answer to Hollywood) movie star, is little more than an extended melodramatic "Saturday Night Live" skit with pretty songs and fabulous dance numbers. Think of a lavishly produced music video stretched to two- and-a-half hours. As Akaash becomes a Bollywood star he is corrupted by fame, fortune, and his leading lady, Rani (Ayesha Dharker) turning his back on his sweet grandmother (Madhur Jaffrey) and best friend, Sweetie (Sriram Ganesan), but in the end he abruptly redeems himself, saves his neighborhood from destruction by the real estate developers, overcomes the villainous attorney (Deep Katdare) and wins the girl (Anisha Nagarajan). Hurray for Bollywood!

The feel good musical is Andrew Lloyd Webber's Broadway version of an extravagant Las Vegas show set to the lovely pop music, which sounds similar to A. R. Rahman, one of India's most popular and prolific film composers. The only time the show reaches anywhere near the magic of its advance hype is with the pulsating "Shakalaka Baby," when everyone is onstage shaking and grooving in lively colored costumes amid the 32 jet fountain's bubbling streams of erupting water all bathed in shimmering bright lights.

Caroline or Change is at the Eugene O'Neill Theatre, 230 West 49th Street. Bombay Dreams is playing at the Broadway Theatre, 1681 Broadway at 53rd Street. Tickets are available for both through Telecharge.com online or call 212-239-6200.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

13 Going On 30

Charm is just a fine, silky hair's breadth away from magic. Every moviemaker wishes to have a dust coating of magic on his creation. Star-struck boys, like myself, are prone to be smitten easily by an actress's smile if, that's IF, that curl of charismatic sorcery twists her lips and your toes. It's been happening a lot of late and, darned if it hasn't happened again. The newest addition to my charm bracelet, worn only at night, is Jennifer Garner, who wakes suddenly to find her 13 year young body has gained a few years and pounds and is now 30 years old, hence the title 13 Going On 30. Her "bee bites" have blossomed into "honeys" and they are all holding down an important job on a magazine titled Poise (of which she ain't got any). This isn't an easy premise to pull off but, with the special, star dust direction of Gary Winick (Tadpole), she earns a link onto my charm collection.

"Don't ask," is my advice as to how Ms. Garner's character, Jenna, overnight grows from a scrawny kid played by Christa B. Allen, into the nonplussed, post-feminist princess with a vital nagging naiveness that's as catching as a case of measles. The script, by Josh Goldsmith and Cathy Yuspa (frankly a "girl" version of 1988's Big, which made Tom Hanks a star), has some of that grow-up-fast magic dust sprinkled on the little girl Jenna obsessed by MTV and a bad-girl club, Six Chicks. She sprouts into the lovely charmer with a 2004 up-to-date body still reeling in 1987 love with a pudgy boy. It's easy to slip past that shaky start because the film firms up as fast as Jenna's body. Besides the body, she has a huge wardrobe, fabulous apartment, an ice hockey star as a boyfriend and Madonna as a friend. Ms. Garner's performance out-distances all that 2000 luxury and also out-dances all the back-biting bitchiness of the famous fashion magazine, so symptomatic of the time and of the life she had dreams of as a child. Now, she finds the 'grownups' are not really that grownup – at all.

One of 13 Going On 30's best scenes has Jenna at a dance party where her girlishness has her leading the dancing to Michael Jackson's "Thriller" video. Totally unabashed, she explodes with childish exuberance in near-goofy fashion and has the party digging the zombie number. It is deliriously enlivening for the party and the film's audience as well.

Jennifer Garner's Jenna is a victory of style and conscious ability over matter. The storyline never bothers to get older than 13. The fact of the matter is that the movie's immaturity concerning issues such as Jenna's confronting her boyfriend of years ago, now grown into Mark Ruffalo, plays only as old-fashioned, her quite nutsy editor-in-chief Andy Serkis is unbelievable and the terrific Judy Greer as the villain of the piece is cracking good but can't whip up the frail material to as high a froth as bubbled up by Ms. Garner. Maybe that magic dust clouds my senses.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

On the back of my SUSHI CHEF box of panko here is what is written: "Panko bread flakes are much lighter and crunchier than ordinary bread crumbs. These delicious bread flakes are made in Japan from traditional Japanese bread. The loaves are slowly dried, then shredded into crispy flakes."

According to Elizabeth Andoh, author of An American Taste of Japan (Morrow), the Japanese first learned to make bread from the Portuguese and adapted their word for it, pao; – ko in Japanese means "flour," "crumb," or "powder." Japanese panko have pointed, irregular shapes that make for an unusually crunchy surface when fried. Elizabeth, colleague, food journalist and culinary director of Taste of Culture in Tokyo, goes on to say she prefers those that have no egg or honey listed in the ingredients. There is no egg but honey is listed in the brand I purchased.

With little time to spend cooking one evening I rinsed and dried a fillet of pollock, lightly seasoned it with salt and pepper, and coated both sides with panko crumbs. After a quick sauté in oil and baking in a hot oven, the fish emerged crisp without and moist within. I marveled at both the taste and texture. Encouraged by the amazing crunch of this terrific product I adapted a "fried" chicken recipe and skewered boneless cubes of chicken coated with panko to oven-fry. And don't we all love crisply fried onion rings but stay away for obvious reasons? Here the rings are tossed with beaten egg white, cornstarch, coated with panko and baked in a hot oven with truly great results.

SKEWERED OVENFRIED CHICKEN WITH PANKO COATING

The recipe is designed to be a main course, yet would make a nifty appetizer.

A silpat lined cookie sheet makes for easy cleanup when baking the chicken.

Serves 4 as main course or 6-8 as appetizer

3 skinless boneless chicken breast halves
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1/4 teaspoon each dry mustard, garlic powder and paprika
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1 extra-large egg white
2 tablespoons skim milk
1 1/2 cups panko bread crumbs
1/2 teaspoon coarse (Kosher) salt
1 bunch scallions, trimmed and cut into 1-inch pieces
1 teaspoon vegetable oil
4 6-inch wooden skewers soaked in water for 30 minutes

1.Trim the chicken breasts of any excess fat and sinew. Rinse and pat dry with paper towels and cut into 1 1/4-inch chunks.

2.Place flour in a paper bag with dry mustard, garlic powder, paprika and freshly ground pepper. Beat egg white with the milk in a medium bowl. Place panko and salt in another paper bag.

3.Place chicken pieces in bag with the seasoned flour and shake to coat. Transfer the chicken to the egg mixture and toss to coat. Place chicken in second bag with panko and shake to coat. Toss the scallion pieces in oil to coat.

Preheat oven to 425 degrees

4.Skewer the chicken pieces catching the two ends beginning, centered and ending with a scallion. Place skewers on a lightly greased cookie sheet or a silpat- lined sheet which does not have to be greased. Place in preheated oven and bake for 18-20 minutes. Chicken will be firm but slightly springy to the touch when done.

CRUNCHY PANKO COATED ONION RINGS

Oven "frying" gives these panko coated onion rings a crisp crust without deep frying.

Serves 4

2 medium-large onions, sliced crosswise
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 extra-large egg white
2 tablespoons skim milk
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 cup panko bread crumbs
1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
1/4 teaspoon paprika

Preheat oven to 425 degrees

1.Separate onions into rings. Place flour in a small paper bag and add the onion rings. Shake to coat. Beat egg white with the milk and cornstarch in a medium bowl. Transfer onion rings to the egg mixture and toss to coat evenly. Place panko in another small paper bag with salt and paprika and shake in the mixture to coat.

2. Spread rings on a greased or silpat-lined cookie sheet. Bake in preheated oven for 15-18 minutes until rings are lightly colored and crisp. Sprinkle with salt and serve warm or at room temperature.

Silvia Lehrer will give a cooking demonstration featuring Italian canapes at Williams-Sonoma, Saturday May 8th, noon-2 p.m. in Bridgehampton Commons.

Dining In The Hamptons

Side Dish

By Aji Jones

A touch of Tuscany comes to Montauk with the opening of Acqua Terre on South Edison Street at the site of the former Caswell's. Drawing inspiration from eight regions in Northern Italy, the cuisine takes diners on a journey through one of the world's most famous gastronomic regions. The two-tiered dining room affords guests dramatic ocean views from the second floor. Acqua Terre is the brainchild of Jerry Passaretti and John and Connie Pezulich; the executive chef is Chris Eissler, who is a co-owner as well. Under his supervision, the menu features an inspiring selection of northern Italian dishes including an Antipasti Platter (assembled tableside), Veal Osso Bucco, Pheasant Con I Funghi, Carre d'Agnello Arrosto (roast rack of lamb), as well as traditional Italian dessert items. For more info call 668-6828.

The new Ristorante Capri (formerly Rubi Red), located in Wainscott, has announced that the Capri Wine Bar adjoining the restaurant is now open. The newly renovated space will be open from Wednesday through Sunday from 5 p.m. to 1 a.m. The Capri Wine Bar boasts an extensive selection of wines by the glass as well as a tapas menu, which will be served until midnight. For details call 907-8031. Capri will also be offering a variety of special dishes for Mother's Day. They are opening for dinner beginning at 5 p.m.

In wine dinner news, 75 Main (283-7575) in Southampton will be collaborating with the Wolffer Estate to present a food and wine pairing dinner on Saturday, May 15th. The event will begin at 7:00 p.m. with a cocktail reception in the bar room. The meal is $100 per person plus tax and gratuity and the menu will include: watermelon, red onion and arugula salad, served with a Wolffer Estate 2004 Verjus goat cheese dressing and paired with the Wolffer Estate 2003 Rose; hummus and spinach stuffed shrimp, accompanied by Wolffer Estate 2000 La Ferme Martin Merlot; New Zealand lamb chops, served with the Wolffer Estate 2003 Late Harvest Chardonnay; and much more.

A Mother's Day Brunch kicks off the season for the Southampton Inn's breakfast and brunch restaurant on Sunday from noon to 3 p.m. With Black Tie Caterers, The Inn is serving a buffet including grilled salmon with asparagus; classic eggs Benedict; penne pasta with grilled chicken, pesto and pine nuts; steamed mussels with tomato and basil; a carving station with roast sirloin and baked Virginia ham; desserts; and a children's menu. Mimosas are included. The Southampton Inn also offers a full continental breakfast and brunch from 10 a.m. to noon on Saturday and Sunday, May 9 through June 30, and every day from July 1 through Labor Day. The outdoor Courtyard restaurant is used, weather permitting. For more information call 283-6500.

Breakwater Café at the Montauk Manor in Montauk will also be serving dinner on Mother's Day from 3:00 p.m. until 9:00 p.m. The three-course prix fixe menu will include a selection of traditional Sunday dinner choices. The prix fixe is specially priced at $25 and all mothers will receive a complimentary glass of champagne. For further info call 668-3949.

Also for Mother's Day, Della Femina (329-6666) will offer a special three-course prix fixe. The menu will be served from 5 p.m. until 9 p.m. for $45 per person. Each mom will receive a complimentary glass of sparkling Prosecco. An a la carte and children's menu will also be available.

Pacific East (267-7770) has recently promoted bartender Henry Lopez to bar manager for the 2004 season. Since joining the Amagansett eatery's team in 2002, Lopez has helped it to achieve record-breaking success. He's spent the last 12 years working behind various bars in New York, creating concoctions that have been featured in many publications including Time Out NY, Daily News, New York Post, Hamptons Cottages & Gardens, and Hamptons Magazine. The new cocktail menu at Pacific East includes many innovative drinks, like their signature Watermelon Saketini. Some of the new summertime cocktails on the bar menu this summer include: apple mint lemonade; crushed julep and Pacific East lemonade; Cuban daiquiris (plain or add fresh mango, banana, or strawberry); Cadillac margaritas; and Pacific passion and lychee martinis.

Dining In The Hamptons

Fruit On The Barbie

I saw the perfect pineapple last week. And luscious strawberries, blush orange mangos and bright yellow papayas. But it's forty-six degrees and feels too soon to bite into a peach, expecting sweetness. But there is a way. Grill it.

It may sound strange, but it's not that exotic. Grilled fruits serve as garnish for fabulous entrees in restaurants, and they are often a main ingredient in desserts. But at home, where casual grilling – when you haven't planned ahead for days and days and aren't expecting company – is assumed to be basic and boring burgers, fruit will be a surprise.

In a saucepan, bring to a boil, then reduce and thicken a mixture of butter, brown sugar, dark rum, honey and a dash of Worcestershire sauce. Coat pineapple wedges in the glaze, and then lay them on the hot grill. Turn once, to create grill marks on both sides, and voila. You've brought out the sweetness without masking the tanginess, and made an excellent treat. Quick, easy and inventive. The unripe peaches can be grilled in foil. Cut them in halves, remove the stones and fill with a mixture of washed, ripe berries. Add a squeeze of lemon juice and a sprinkle of brown sugar, then fold and seal the foil, and cook for 20 minutes. It's so good.

Mangos, papayas and bananas can all be grilled, making the natural sugars pop, and the fruit seem seasonably scrumptious. Whole pieces of grilled fruit, or fresh fruit salsa, made of chopped fruit combined with lime juice and cilantro, are perfect for grilled tuna. Tuna is a favorite of most people who like grilled fish, and it is so easy. Cut the tuna steaks into chucks and skewer, or keep whole. Brush with olive oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper and cook for around eight minutes. Last summer, we grilled halibut fillets in a special concoction that included store-bought barbecue sauce (there are hundreds of choices and they are surprisingly good), tons of freshly squeezed lemon juice, minced garlic and pepper. Marinate for anywhere from 10 to 30 minutes in the fridge, and grill until opaque. Halibut is a good choice for grilling because it holds together.

More traditional barbecuing includes plenty of meat and chicken, but even these don't have to follow the expected route. For a change, you can also make your own barbecue sauce and store it in jars to use throughout the summer. From North Carolina, where barbecue is religion, bloodsport and art, come two different versions of barbecue sauce, Eastern and Western. The Eastern version is vinegar-based, and has no tomato product in it. Also called Lexington-style barbecue, this sauce is historically used to season only the shoulder of the hog (all great BBQ sauce was invented to service the "pig picking".) It is made up of cider vinegar, brown sugar, water, salt, pepper, cayenne pepper, and black pepper. The Western style is historically used to season the whole hog, and includes tomatoes or ketchup. Also brown sugar, lemon juice, butter, minced onion, hot pepper sauce and Worcestershire. It is obviously a bit richer. Both can be spiced up with a bit of whisky.

I'm sure there are secret ingredients in the back woods which take these sauces over the top, but I'm not from North Carolina, (though I have spent enough time there to learn to love and respect the barbecue), and I don't know them. One great website to check out is www.visitnc.com. Locally, I love the sauce at Turtle Crossing in Amagansett, and you can buy it in bottles.

Large slices of vegetables, including portabello mushrooms, can be marinated in oil and balsamic vinegar with freshly chopped herbs and lemon. If you want to go with vegetable kebabs and add shrimp to the skewer, leave out the vinegar, but add a little butter for a richer taste. Be sure to cut the vegetables in equal sized pieces, so you don't have the rather infamous burnt/raw and therefore bitter problem many amateur chefs have with their grilled peppers and such. Corn is great on the grill, really reliable, and I think it's best plain if it's sweet and in season at the end of the summer.

Small red, purple, and white potatoes seasoned with oil and garlic are great cooked on the grill, and look pretty randomly strewn about. If they are too small to be on their own, use a wire basket made expressly for this purpose. There are actually several must-have tools for a great grilling season, and they include: the aforementioned wire basket; a fish grid or hinged basket, to prevent flaking and thus disappearing into the hot coals; basting brushes for continued moisture enhancement; protective, fireproof gloves to move the food around with aplomb; a spatula to flip; tongs to turn; non-reactive bowls for marinating with all different acids (lemons, vinegar, tomatoes); skewers (wooden, soaked in water for an hour before use or metal); and finally, a tough wire brush, to clear the charred bits from the grate while the grill is still hot, and therefore, easier to clean.

I haven't mentioned the hundreds of ways to cook vegetables, or the different spices that add international flair, but use your imagination. The gas or charcoal grill is a truly versatile cooking tool, for cool days or warm nights, clouds or sun, weekend or weekday.

Away At School. . . By David Lion Rattiner

It's a Scary World

I was riding my bicycle yesterday along the Charles River when my cell phone started vibrating in my pocket. The vibration in my pocket startled me a little bit and I found myself swerving onto the grass and stopping quickly in order to answer it. I always get a little excited when my phone rings, even if it ends up being bad news. I answered the phone. It was my best friend from high school, John Schirrippa. He goes to Mary Washington College in Virginia. He told me that he was graduating this Sunday and that he couldn't believe it.

"Four years man, just like that."

"I know, it's crazy."

"It's scary is what it is."

"Yep."

We talked a little more about the possibility of going off to Australia for a week or two. We talked scuba diving, we talked hiking, and we talked life after college.

"Are you and Jill going to stay together?" I said.

"Most definitely, I think I am going to try and get a job in D.C. I'm going to try and do something for the FBI."

I think it is so strange that this is something that he wants to do. I always thought of John doing something that was classic, like lawyer or doctor. FBI? Where the hell does that come from? It's awesome though, I started to think about Nicholas Cage from the movie The Rock and how cool an FBI agent he made.

We got off our cell phones and got back to whatever it was that we were doing. I, of course, was riding a bike. John, who the hell knows? I hopped back onto my bike and was looking down at my front tire as I pedaled as hard as I could. I couldn't help but think about what John had said, about the world being scary. The world is kind of scary when you think about it. Like the bicycle I was riding on for example. I was putting so much faith into this thing. I was easily going twenty miles an hour on the side walk, no helmet, no nothing. What if the tire broke? What if the metal bent and broke? I'd be a dead man. My whole body would go forward and I would propel forward into the ground, possibly head first, breaking my neck and then, of course, that would be it. It would be a done deal, the story of my life. He died because his bicycle broke. I looked over at the Mass Ave Bridge. There were, like a thousand cars traveling across it. I got to thinking about how heavy those cars are.

You know, all it would take is for one rusty bolt or something to cause a chain reaction and the whole bridge would just come crashing down. But it doesn't, for some reason. It works. The bike will not break as I ride and the bridge can hold all of those cars. Even the cars themselves, they could go wrong. What if somebody's brakes fail, going sixty miles an hour? This could cause a pile up! No one seems to think about this kind of stuff, they just go with it.

So much within my eyesight could go terribly wrong. It is ridiculous. A woman with a running stroller ran by me. What if she let go of the stroller and it fell into the river? This running with the stroller shouldn't even be legal! I mean think about it. There was a fuel truck driving by. Can you imagine if a little spark got a hold of that fuel in that fuel truck?

These are the risks that we all deal with every day, which we all have to face. All of us, we are a bunch of crazy thrill seekers who don't even get a thrill out of the thrill anymore. Sure, sky diving scares the crap out of us, but we all know that walking across the street is way more dangerous, yet we'll cross the street every day.

Maybe it is not so much that it is a scary world, but more of a weird world. Or maybe it is just more of our own personal world where we all get to decide for ourselves what we think is the scary stuff. I saw yesterday a bunch of guys window washing the Prudential Center, the tallest building in Boston, I think. One little slip and the guy would go plummeting to his doom. But you know something, he's washing windows and he needs to wash those windows and that's that. Yeah he's scared, but he's going to do it anyway.

When In Manhattan...

Tribeca Film Festival

The Tribeca Film Institute launched the First Annual Tribeca Film Festival in 2002 as a response to the damage suffered by the downtown area the year before. Jane Rosenthal and Tribeca resident Robert DeNiro created the event to celebrate New York City filmmaking, and contribute to the recovery of lower Manhattan. With a short 120 days of planning, and the help of over 1300 volunteers, the festival was a big success. The first year drew over 150,000 people and more than $10 million in revenues for local businesses and filmmakers. In 2003, the population of visitors doubled to over 300,000, and the area businesses saw more than $50 million in added cash. Previous years have included such major premiers as Star Wars: Episode II – Attack of the Clones, About a Boy, and Divine Secrets of the Ya-Ya Sisterhood, as well as panel discussions, new independent movies, workshops, family panels, children's screenings, and a street fair. Martin Scorsese has curated a series of New York films both years.

This weekend, the 2004 Tribeca Film Festival will be rolling off its final movies. What began May 1st will end on Sunday May 9th. It is not too late to get involved. Although at this point buying an all festival pass is moot, there are still lots of movies to see for day-of-show tickets at the low price of $10 cash. With way too many movies to discuss here, the festival provides detailed listings on their web site: www.tribecafilmfestival.org, which can be printed and brought with you. Some might know from the Hamptons Film Festival that picking the right films is tough. To quote a friend of mine, "don't get caught in independent hell," as he says when he cringes away from IFC on cable. Ask around or do some web research to find out what movies might be worth seeing and are not so artsy as to become "fartsy." Many times, the director, cast, and crew will be on hand during screenings for a question-and-answer session and brief discussion of their film.

It is with great pleasure that I announce that the winner of the 2004 online poll for the winner of the annual Tribeca Online People's Choice, presented by American Express, is Ferris Bueller's Day Off. This choice says a lot about the crowd at this festival. A movie without pretense or a naked Harvey Keitel, Ferris Bueller is classic comedy. Come down to the Tribeca Drive-In, hosted by GM, Friday, May 7, to see the film you voted to the big screen. The drive-in is a yearly part of the festivities that brings back the classic American pasttime of drive-in movies. Showings will run nightly May 6-8th, at 8:00 p.m. on Pier 25 in Chelsea. This year's family outdoor street fair will be on Saturday, May 8, from 10:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m. Participants can enjoy fun, food, and special performances for the entire family. Scholastic, the children's publishing company, will host family events for kids and parents during the street fair this year.

A new short called There Was an Old Lady Who Swallowed a Fly, based on the classic children's tale, will be screened, and the Scholastic "Everything Fun For Kids" tent will entertain with storytelling, face painting, and visits from characters like Clifford the Big Red Dog. Scholastic will also supply a craft tent for kids.

The Tribeca Film Festival is fun for everyone, and runs May 1-9 at various venues around the city. Ticket prices and show times are available at www.tribecafilmfestival.org.

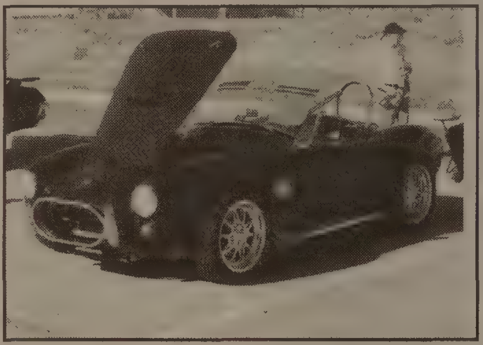
Classic Cars With Bob Gelber

How does one go about selling a classic car? Recently, I have received many e-mails asking me that very question, so let me see if I can offer some helpful advice. First, find out what your car is really worth. This is a tough call because beauty is not only in the eye of the beholder, but it is also in the eyes of the owner or seller. Everyone has a different standard of excellence. I have personally gone to see cars that were advertised as "mint" and found them to be in rotten condition. So be honest with yourself because the condition of the car is one of the main determining factors as to its value.



Be aware that a serious car collector is concerned with every facet of the car's condition: paint, rust, chrome, mechanicals, interior. Everything. Unless you are looking for a hot rod, originality is very important. I recently saw an ad for an AC Bristol roadster. What caught my eye was the unusually low price of $30,000. Reading the ad further, I was told that it did not have the original engine, but a Chevrolet V-8. Why, at the very least, didn't the owner install a Ford V-8? Then he would have had a faux Cobra. The point that I am trying to make is that if the AC were original, it would have easily been worth $60,000.

Once you have been honest with yourself about the car's condition, the best way to find out what it is worth is to see what comparable models are selling for. I usually check out Hemmings Motor News to see what other owners are asking for similar cars. If it is a foreign car, I sometimes look at European auction results that are printed in several major British collector car magazines that can usually be found in any large chain bookstore, or on the British website, www.octane-magazine.com.

Certain cars, like early Fords, muscle cars, popular foreign makes like MG and Porsche, have a set value, so you can easily spot the price trend in the above magazines. Rare and oddball cars are another matter. Used car dealers have a crude saying for the cars they sell, "There's an ass for every seat." When it comes to the oddball car it's up to you , the oddball car owner, to find the ass.

Let me make another point that you really do not want to hear. Rarely do collector cars sell for the price that you see advertised. Everybody haggles, so be prepared to be insulted with low offers. If you see an auction selling price, be advised that the auction company took an entrance fee as well as a piece of the selling price. Usually the costlier the car, the larger the spread is between the asking price and the actual selling price. Several years ago, I made a low offer on a 1971 Mercedes 230 sedan. The asking price was $9,000 and I offered $4,000. Before you go berserk and start calling me a cheapskate, let me explain. First, the car was not my dream car, but it was original and very clean, plus I wanted it as a beater to use around the Hamptons. Second, it was overpriced, but oh, so charming, even though it is the car that is always blown up and destroyed in European action films. Third, I wanted the car, but not that much. The owner was actually highly insulted by and angry with my offer, but three months later sold me the car at the 'insulting' price of $4,000. Two months after I bought the Mercedes, the entire exhaust system, a rusty mess, fell out of the car. It cost one thousand dollars for a new one. The main point of this tale is the fact that a collector car is worth only as much as someone is willing to pay for it. Be realistic.

Where do you sell the bloody thing? First, try to sell it locally through Dan's or any other local paper. Run the ad for weeks because collector cars are generally not as easy to sell as recent models. You can try the local collector car auction that the Kensington Motor Group in Sag Harbor promotes every spring. It is a wonderful collector car event, but please be aware that sales results are not guaranteed.

If you don't succeed in selling your car locally, then try national ads in Hemmings Motor News. This is really the bible of car collectors. However, it has been my experience that unless your car is unusual or really bargain- priced, national ads don't work that well. People prefer not to travel in order to buy a collector car unless the deal is something very special. Another simple thing to do is to put a for sale sign in the window of the car, then show it off in town or in your driveway. Check first to see if this is against local village codes.

Good luck, and remember that no offer is an insult. The buyer can always come up in price. Conversely, you can come down. It is all part of the collector car game.

The Oregon Road House

Renovation Is Not Only A Labor Of Love, But A Chance To Make History

It wasn't love at first sight. A slightly down-at-the heels antique farmhouse, with a hand-written "For Sale By Owner" sign out front, sat in the shadow of its single neighbor, a stately, well cared for mid-1800s Colonial.

But it sat, white against a lush backdrop of green, on one of the most beautiful thoroughfares on the North Fork, a nearly unspoiled stretch through farmland that runs south from Long Island Sound and east the entire length of Cutchogue. The property was framed by vineyards, with the view to the rear resembling California's Napa Valley. And as they say in the high stakes world of the East End real estate market, location is everything.

So after driving up and down the road and noticing the little sign a couple of times, we decided to call. It wouldn't hurt to have a look, right?

Above a rocking chair porch with its original columns, the house's charming Yankee gutters were still gracefully intact, having been spared a cruel amputation in favor of the modern but ugly aluminum variety. Yankee gutters, for the uninitiated, are actually made of wood and are often lined with copper. Though beautiful architecturally, if neglected they leak and eventually rot, which is precisely why you see so few intact 100 years after a structure is built.

During our initial tour we discovered that the windows throughout were original and in surprisingly good working order. But the usual "upgrades" of the last mid-century – wall-to-wall gold carpeting and "acoustic" drop ceilings held in place by homely if economical cove moldings – were abundant. The kitchen, though spacious, was dark and gloomy, with a small bedroom off to one side and a laundry area and dated bath to the other.

Upstairs, a narrow, claustrophobic hall led around a sharp corner to one of the bedrooms, all of which were surprisingly light and welcoming. Old-fashioned attic stairs led to the third story, where you could look out over the grapes through the triangular windows that adorn the house's gables. An old stain was still slightly discernable on the floor, which we were told was probably left by an aging ham decades ago. The sense of a bygone era was both palpable and intoxicating.

Behind the house the ground sloped almost immediately at a fairly steep angle, making the addition of a terrace or deck impossible. But surrounding the house on three sides were the most beautiful mature trees. An old Silver Maple way out front by the road, planted precisely where all the landscape books tell you not to plant them, has withstood the ravages of wind off the Sound for half a century, and an ancient Little Leaf Linden arched its verdant canopy just outside a bay window.

The deck off the kitchen and mudroom is a favorite place to enjoy the vineyard views

The property's other attractions were three outbuildings, all in good condition, including what had been a working chicken coop, a four-car garage, and a small barn.

While pondering whether to accept the potential drawbacks, which can be hidden and major in old structures, we took a drive by at sunset one evening. A neighbor has since told us that she feels like she lives in a Monet painting, and that evening we must have felt the same. A few months later, the house was ours.

Closing day was in early fall, and we celebrated with Champagne on the porch. But winter came early that year, and the blazing sunsets soon turned to drenching downpours as we made plans for the property's renovation. One day, during a particularly hard rain, we stopped at the house, as we often did back then. A large puddle had formed on the floor of the downstairs bedroom, and when we got to the top of the stairs, we saw that water was coming in under the window at the end of the hall. I thought of the Yankee gutters and how expensive they were to repair, and I did the only rational thing I could think of. I cried.

It is now nearly two years later. What began as a simple if fretful remodel in February of 2003 turned quickly into a major renovation as we realized the property's potential. Off the house came two layers of old siding – we discovered that the sheathing underneath had actually been "signed" exactly 100 years before, in 1903 – and up went new cedar shakes. We opted for the premium R&R "perfections" on the house as well as the outbuildings. R&R means refitted and rebutted, which allows the shakes to be installed closer together, or "butted," for a neater appearance. Perfection refers to "clear" shakes made of wood with no knots.

The four-car garage, which had been the previous owner's workshop for years, became a two-car garage with a spacious home gym in the rear. The expansive views of the grapes and farm fields from the Stairmaster have proved to be great incentives!

The small barn behind the garage has a room off the back where migrant farm workers must have lived seasonally, and their photos and mementos still adorn the walls. We've left this as is to preserve a piece of the property's history, but we ripped out an ugly drop ceiling in the main part of the building and revealed a lovely wooden roof, which we complemented with antique hanging light fixtures and tongue-and-groove pine flooring and siding (see the story "How To Choose Subcontractors" in this section). The result is airy with a welcoming rural feel, and it will make a great home office one of these days as we've equipped it with phone and cable service. (Make sure you look ahead to what you may be using a building for in the future before gutting and redoing the interior. Installing electric lines even if you aren't ready to buy fixtures, and running pipes for possible future plumbing, will save major rip-out headaches later on.)

You never know what you'll find in the walls of old houses, but everything was sound and solid as we removed old plaster to install insulation and wiring, and so we decided to go ahead and add a master bedroom over the existing kitchen. We hired an engineer, Robert O'Brien of Laurel, to draw up plans for the addition to be submitted to the town building department. The addition is one of the biggest changes we ended up making, and certainly one of the most rewarding. The room has incredible views and, with its French doors framed by a custom wrought iron railing complete with a copper flower box, it feels like you're in Provence when the doors are flung open.

Surprisingly, the bedroom addition made the narrow upstairs hall feel more expansive as the hall no longer dead-ended before making the aforementioned turn, and also solved the problem of the only leaking Yankee gutter, which had to be removed when the addition was installed. Rich Soper, a young carpenter working for our contractor, had never built a Yankee gutter before, but he took apart the old one and used it to model the two new ones he would create. The result is a flawless transition from new to old; the addition looks as if it has always been there.

We opened up the downstairs bedroom into the front parlor and hung a set of French doors to create both the possibility of privacy, as well as better traffic circulation, and added custom built-in bookcases along the east wall of the parlor. As the cases were designed and built on site, they look original to the house, and were well worth the expense. Around the corner, what was previously the living room became an elegant dining room, papered in Schumacher's "Orient Dream" blue and white toile, with a wide, built-in window seat filled with cushions in the bay under the giant Linden tree.

The profile of the house after the addition of the master bedroom

We pretty much had to gut the kitchen to add studs and headers when we decided to put the addition on top of it. When the construction was complete, we began the interior renovation by installing heated antique limestone floors throughout (you can actually see "fossils" in the stone). We opted for hot water radiant as opposed to electric radiant, as we were warned that if one of the wires burns out, you will get a "cold spot" that only ripping up the floor will remedy. The heated stone floor continues into the downstairs bath and mudroom, where a small, sunny window seat snuggled in between two tall, narrow closets is a great place to remove winter boots and toast your stocking feet. (Make sure your mason seals your natural stone floor adequately, as stone is porous and stains easily otherwise.)

All the cabinets, including a large island, we custom designed with the contractor's cabinet shop, Singletree Woodworking, in Cutchogue. The cabinetry and layout is modeled after English designs I had admired, including a plate rack that holds service for 12 and a pot filler over the range. To brighten the room, we went with linen white paint and satin nickel knobs and drawer pulls. Carved wood corbels add elegance and formality to the space and beautiful, subtle opal glass in the overhead cabinets reflect light. By creating an old-fashioned, walk-in pantry – complete with under-counter wine cooler – out of the closet off the former bedroom, we eliminated the need for lots of upper cabinets, leaving that space instead for windows and artwork.

Torn between soapstone countertops and dark green Verdi Antique, a very hard marble unique to Vermont, we chose the Verdi in a polished finish (as opposed to "honed," which is a flat, satin finish) to reflect the light from a triple set of divided light casement windows we installed over the clay-fired farmhouse sink. The soffit over the sink, from which hang two cobalt blue pendants, is gracefully arched to frame the windows. And a single French door at the back of the kitchen not only provides access to a spacious, columned deck topped with a pergola, it also affords a lovely view of the rear vineyards, now visible all the way from the house's front entrance as a result of the door's placement.

The upstairs bath, formerly a tiny bedroom, sports sand-colored tumbled marble floors with "beach glass" dots randomly set on the diagonal. For the shower we chose the same stone in a smaller size – install smaller size tiles on shower floors to help prevent slips – and frameless plate glass doors with polished nickel hardware. The shower hardware from England, with the sort of head that "rains" on you, is one of our favorite features.

Landscaping presented its own challenges, mostly because of the drop off behind the house, but also because we had to create driveways. Having lived on the South Fork in Southampton, we have long loved gravel drives and privet hedges, and so these were among the first things we installed.

The unattractive drop off in the rear was remedied brilliantly by our landscaper, Mark Schill, who installed two sets of New England-style stone walls, creating elegant terraces running behind the house, along the side of the garage, and in front of the barn. This work also gave us an opportunity to fill in the area directly off the kitchen, so we were able to build a beautiful deck that wraps all the way around to the mudroom entrance.

The project is now nearly complete after a year and a half. We sit on our front porch in the evenings when we can and watch the sun set over acres of grapes. It is spring, and there is the occasional "traffic jam" when huge cab tractors roll down the road with planting machines in tow.

But even as we relish our privacy, we've come to realize that in antique or historic home renovations, while it may be the owners who pay the bills and have the vision, it is everyone involved – carpenters, plumbers, electricians, masons, painters and a host of others – who turn vision into reality. Renovation projects may be about taking something old and making it shine once again, but they are also opportunities for many in a community to contribute to the history of a place. As the saying goes, "it takes a village," and a dream.

Mosaics: Capture The Essence of Barcelona

I first fell in love with mosaics in Barcelona, Spain, the playground of one of the true masters of mosaics. Antoni Gaudi was a groundbreaking architect whose primary driving forces were his Catalan nationalism, his devout Catholicism, and his profound respect for nature. He managed to intertwine these themes in his beautiful, organic architecture through the symbolic use of Catalunya's dragon, the recurrence of crosses, and designs inspired by trees, animals, and the nearby Mediterranean Sea. In all of his great works, including the Sagrada Familia and El Parc Guell (The Guell Park), mosaics are used to fuse Gaudi's three passions. The unfinished spires of the Sagrada Familia are cloaked in tiles, all gathered from the reaches of Gaudi's precious Catalunya. The face of La Casa Batllo (The Batllo House), an apartment building on La Calle Passeig de Gracia, is said to represent a shipwreck in the Mediterranean, with the organic forms of sea shells and shiny scales making up a giant mosaic on the façade of the building. The Catalan dragon is again represented in mosaic on the top of the building. But in no place I've seen are mosaics utilized in quite the way they are displayed on the longest bench in the world in El Parc Guell. The bench itself echoes the serpent theme, twisting around a plaza where you can usually watch a group of kids play a pickup game of futbol (soccer). And coating the curved lines of the serpents' slither is a giant mosaic that fades from theme to theme, sometimes displaying bubbles or flowers or sometimes hinting at a rough sea or a serene night sky.

This sort of "patchwork in ceramic," immortalized by Gaudi as the essence of Barcelona, is a fabulous form of expression and can make for a creative addition to any room, patio or deck in your home. From tiling your entire bathroom floor to just making a mosaic frame for a wall mirror, this form of décor can add color and personality in a unique way.

So how do you go about creating the Barcelona ambience in your indisputably American home? There is always the somewhat reliable option of calling a professional. There are plenty of home improvement centers in the area that have experience with mosaics, particularly in bathrooms or kitchens. You can find an example of local mosaicing at the Siena Spirituality Center at Villa Maria in Water Mill, whose mosaic tiled floor was designed to commemorate the year the structure was originally built and 2001, the year of its "rebirth." John Barman and Kelly Graham of John Barman Inc were the principal designers of this mosaic.

But if you want the fulfilling experience of creating your own mosaic, it can be done. By doing it yourself, you can turn a mosaic into an artistic collage of meaning. There are certain things that you save for some inexplicable reason. It's a broken mug, and no matter how you glue it, it just can't hold tea. Yet you have the pieces in a drawer in your kitchen because it was your grandmother's favorite. Put it in the mosaic. Sharp shards of a broken mirror don't have to haunt you with seven years of bad luck. Maybe your mosaic needed a reflective trait. Shells, broken dishes, old tiles with a 70s flare that you can't live with, but can't live completely without. Put them in the mosaic.

Gaudi used all sorts of materials for his constructions, but his personal touch was indisputable. He would only accept materials from the region of Catalunya, another sign of his Catalan nationalism. You can follow in his footsteps by incorporating meaningful materials from your life into your mosaics.

There are many different ways to mosaic, and you use your own creative judgment to decide. You can buy mosaic tiles at an art or craft store, or you can use discarded ceramics and glass. Once you have your materials, you just need to think of a basic idea. The first mosaic I did, I laid out on a wooden board that I had carved into the shape of a moon. My whole idea was just to group my tiles into different shades and then to fade through the spectrum. It turned into a beautiful table with a rainbow moon face.

If you want a more specific design in the mosaic, you may want to sketch out your plan, keeping in mind the basic shapes and sizes of your materials.

The next step is to start tiling. You can either follow your sketch on the surface itself or just try to replicate the image you want. Spread the area with oil adhesive or strong glue and place the tiles in the design you want. Leave enough space in between each tile so that at least a little bit of grout can fit in the cracks. Once your mosaic is set, leave the tiles to dry for a few days. The next step is applying the grout. You can use a rubber bladed scraper to spread the grout over the tiles. Don't worry about covering the tiles with grout; once dried, it will scrape off the smooth surface easily. Once the cracks and openings between the materials are filled with grout, leave it to dry. You should leave it for a couple of days. Then you're ready to scrape the grout from the mosaic, leaving your beautiful, personal creation to shine. Through this fun, fulfilling project, you can bring a piece of Barcelona into your home and give an immortalized place for the pieces of yourself and your history that just didn't seem to fit on the bookshelf or in the china cabinet. Add a patchwork of color and creativity to your home; get mosaicing this summer!

Home, Home on the Sea

Last year during a stay in California I visited an old friend, Captain Russ Grandinetti, on the yacht Domani in Newport Beach. Russ and two of his brothers, whose love for the sea was born in Montauk years ago, are all Captains to large luxury yachts 100 feet or more. One is based in NYC and Sag Harbor and the other in Fort Lauderdale's boating Mecca.

The master suite of this boat was larger than most in-home bedrooms. The 3 baths were marble with gold fixtures, the salon was lined with dark cherry wood and it had a built in bar that ran the width of its hull. The dining area could seat ten and walls were adorned with Italian art. The galley's granite countertops coordinated with stainless appliances and another cherry dining area. The yacht's décor hinted at Tuscany. The wheel house, a captain's dream, contained state of the art maritime technology and a chartroom thought out to the last nautical element. It also had separate Captain's quarters. The interiors of these boats require attention to the very finest detail. All that goes into one of these yachts must not only be aesthetically pleasing but seaworthy as well. Cabinets are all fitted with concealed locks, and galley cabinets have stationary racks so that contents will not rattle or break. Russ told me that most yacht owners do much of their buying, planning and "refitting," as it is called in the boating world, in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, the yachting capital of the world. Many of the boats are designed and decorated there and then brought to popular ports where the rich and famous rendezvous at various times of the year, such as the Hamptons, Newport Beach, California, and the Mediterranean. He himself has transported guests to shore while in Cannes.

Unlike decorating a home, decorating a boat requires specific expertise. Award-winning decorator Dee Robinson, based in Florida, is one of the most renowned yacht interior designers in the country. She boasts some of wealthiest and most discriminating of clients. They look to her to create their dream boat. One of her first jobs was to decorate the interior of Evel Knievel's boat, the Evel Eye, more than 20 years ago. She has decorated yachts such as the 150' Bellini. This yacht's formal interior is filled with rich cherry and marble. The Nova Spirit, a 150' Trinity also designed by Robinson, has a spacious main salon that includes a Baby Grand. This yacht was designed for corporate entertaining. She has designed a countless number of yachts since the 1970s and still remains one of the industry's top designers.

At the time of its completion the famous 315' Limitless was the largest pleasure yacht ever built. It was commissioned by the owner of Victoria's Secret, Leslie Wexler. Its name came about when the owner told designers that there was "no limit" on whatever extravagance it would take to make it like no other yacht and contain absolutely everything one could want or need. Its sister yachts have summered here in the Hamptons. The Limitless, too big for our East End harbors, would need to anchor off shore while visiting. The interior of this boat has 10 staterooms aside from the owner's quarters and was designed with a sophisticated security system. Those that have been onboard say its interior is less ornate and more understated than most yachts of its size, although it has every possible amenity.

Interior yacht decorators custom design everything from spas to staircases in these vessels. I found that yacht designers are a very small and select group that cater to a very specific business. Owners of these yachts look for every possible luxury and latest innovation for their boats.

In Shape At Home

If you're not one to go to the gym, why not bring the gym to you? It's the first week of May and beach weather is just around the corner. Hopes of having that those perfect six-pack abs are what many of us dream of. However, if you're anything like me, it's hard to get motivated, and all I'm reaching for lately is a bag of chips (cheese flavored preferably).

I've spent more money over the years on gym memberships, only to never go. I recently joined again and have only visited twice in the past six months. Not a good track record, but I haven't given up hope yet. I have two weeks before my vacation to make some sort of change in my daily routine and I'm going to do it! But I don't have the space in my home for a personal gym.

There are simple workouts you can do at home with little equipment, but for this article we're going to explore how to build your own personal in-home gym. Here are a few helpful guidelines that include the latest in technology and the best high-end gym equipment on the market today.

The first step in planning to create your own personal gym is to make sure that you have enough room to fit all your equipment. Proper flooring is essential before setting up your equipment. There are special heavy mats that help reduce sound and protect your floors underneath. This mat flooring can also provide a safe and comfortable place for you to sit and do stretching and yoga.

I began my research by doing a consumer web search to investigate a variety of equipment beneficial for an at-home gym. Treadmills are a fun way to get started. They help raise your heart rate and give a healthy cardio workout that everyone can participate in at their own pace. A great place to start is by checking out www.megafitness.com, the Mega Treadmill is priced at $995 including shipping. The number one selling treadmill at Mega Fitness is Star Trac 4500HR offered at $2,495. The Star Trac makes it easy for all levels to indulge a routine that suits their level of endurance.

A recent article that appeared in Men's Journal reviewed in-home gym equipment and came up with several great options that include chest and shoulder presses, leg curls and leg extensions. Some of the more expensive equipment has a new special feature called Free Motion-style (pulley arms).

The Hoist V4 (www.hoistfitness.com) is priced at $1,800 and is very user-friendly. It offers a wide range of settings for its seat – press and back. No matter what your height is, it's easy to adjust accordingly. Rated the best all-around is the TRUE 550HG offered at $4,695 (www.truefitness.com). The only drawback, if any, is that it is a large machine, and if you're concerned with space, this may not be an option for you. On the positive side, this FreeMotion cable-cross machine can be set in fifteen vertical postions that will work out every part of your body.

Cycling is very popular among fitness enthusiasts as well. Cycle machines range from several hundred dollars up, as do rowing machines. The First DegreeFitness Fluid Rowing Machine is priced at $1,699 and can be purchased through Mega Fitness.

Your gym would not be complete without a bench and free weights. This is always a simple way to tone and build muscle. Free weights come in an assortment of weights and can easily be stored.

There are many other options to select from, but the main concern is making sure you choose the right set-up for your home. Motivation and commitment are key. What better motivator than custom designing your own workout room! Start sweating!

Locally you can checkout the Gym Source located on 23 Windmill Lane in Southampton for your gym equipment needs. Call 631-287-1223.

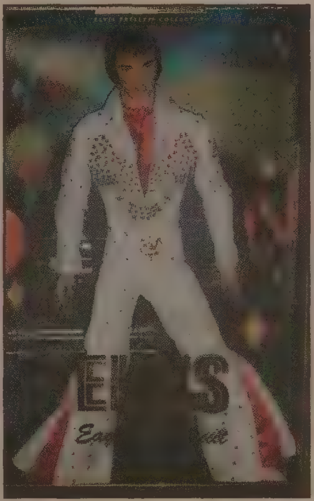
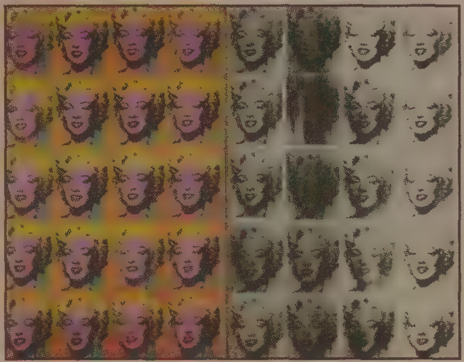
Iconography

In the dictionary, an icon is described as several things. It is the image of a holy person like Jesus, the Virgin Mary, or the Saints, especially an oil painting on a wooden panel used for worship. Icons are also described as somebody or something widely and uncritically admired, something symbolizing a movement or field of activity, or a universally recognized symbol. When decorating, these things can create bold statements and capture the imaginations of you and your visitors. There are great ways to do this without declasse posters of James Dean and Marilyn Monroe from shopping mall frame shops or gaudy statues of the savior from bodegas and Catholic supply stores.



I happen to be an icon collector. In my little home, you'll find everything from pictures of Elvis (my favorite is a painting by Peter Ngo depicting the legend as the King of Hearts), to bodega candles featuring the Virgin of Guadalupe, to a number of sacred hearts and ethnic masks. If you stretch the idea beyond that, you'll find a Spiderman action figure, a picture of Jack Kerouac, and various pieces of ephemera from others of my personal icons, like a framed poem signed by Charles Bukowski. It's an American tradition. Even the White House is decorated with the faces of Dishonest Dubya's predecessors (one is his dad, but it still counts). This reverence holds true for most homes. The first thing you need to do is figure out what icons have meaning for you. Some things just look cool, but it's important to find the images that click. There are a few great places to look out here, but as you collect, you'll find that the more obscure and unique the thing you find, the better it is for conversation and entertaining your mind. Victoria's Mother in East Hampton is a good place to start. They never run short of Kewpie dolls, Elvis imagery, and fun religious and Mexican art. The Day of the Dead has always generated great skeleton statues, and they have plenty of them. Kramoris Gallery in Sag Harbor also has some terrific stuff from Mexico as well as voodoo crafts from Haiti. Their inventory is good, but their prices run a bit high. If money is no issue or you want to invest and you're looking for some fine art that is iconic, drop by the Vered Gallery in East Hampton. They have really the only Marilyn Monroe images worth hanging (unless we're talking Warhol). From photographer and Sag Harbor resident Bert Stern's last sitting series, the collection is widely varied in size and mood. There is an image for anyone who appreciates Marilyn's timeless beauty, and they hold importance as pieces from the actress' last photo shoot before her death in 1962.



Favorite icons are widely available online. Elvis is notorious for resurrection in black velvet paintings, statues, clocks, calendars, plates, and almost anything that will fit his face. Remember the life-size statue along Rte 27 in Southampton? As far as religious stuff goes, I'm more inclined toward things with history or cultural significance, but if you like kitsch, check out www.cheesyjesus.com. The site carries pope on a rope soap for your shower, a mosque alarm clock with five "azan" alarms for each of the day's prayer times, J.C. ashtrays, wall tapestries, and religious boxing dolls. The goofy items can add some humor to a sometimes heavy theme.

Shop around. Do some internal searching of what it is out there that brings on nostalgia and a sense of wonder for you. Whatever that may be, you'll find it with a little time and effort. But please don't forget to add a bit of good taste.

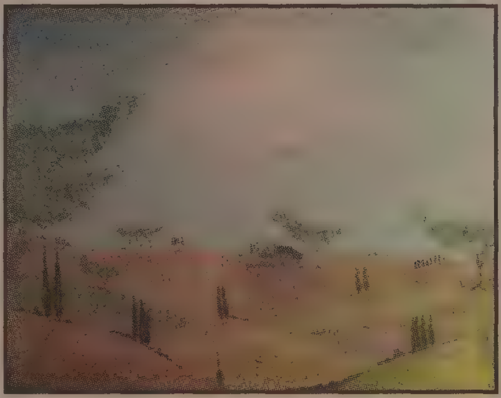
Turning Homes into Havens

Erica-Lynn Huberty has just finished what she calls "a big job." A big job might entail a full room mural of an 18th Century French countryside, or walls with a faux finish technique and stenciling that look like wallpaper, or remaking an old, out-of-date den into a stunning new dining room. "In this case, it's all of those," laughs Huberty.



French countryside mural

Huberty, owner of Blossom Haven Decorative Painting & Design in North Haven, has been a professional fine artist and designer for over 10 years, with her work residing in the private collections of several celebrated musicians, artists, and prominent business people. She began studying art at age 5, and in college, graduated with honors in Fine Art from N.Y.U., and later received her Masters Degree in Visual Arts and Literature from Bennington College. In addition, she had several years of training with a Master Decorative Painter and a Master Fine Finisher.

"I'm really lucky in that I love what I do," Huberty says of her sometimes hectic job schedule. "And I love the variety." Trained and accomplished in all areas of the Decorative Arts, it is not unusual for Huberty to create custom stencils inspired by a client's bed linens, or to use unorthodox interior design ideas to get the effect she knows her client really wants. "If a client needs a table in a particular shade of green with distressing, and Hildreth's has a good plain table to start with, then I'll tell them, 'Let's just get that one, and I'll refinish it with a custom-mixed color and some distressing, or the like.' It's really important to me that each and every job I do is unique. There's little point in everyone's home looking the same, because how many people are really the same?"

Color is definitely one of Huberty's strong suits. It's not unusual for her to see a color in a client's home, and, months later, be able to match it with a piece of furniture or paint chip from memory. "I often mix colors for a wall or piece of furniture with the client right there. They'll say something vague like, 'I want it blue, but not too blue,' and I'll say, 'I know this is going to seem strange, but I'm going to mix this putty-grey color in and it'll be perfect.' They tend to be kind of amazed at the way I get results, but for me, it's all very natural."

Hall fleur de lis

Her clients are usually thrilled when Huberty is done transforming a room – or several rooms – with her incomparable talents. Recently, she completed an underwater mural in a guest bathroom for her client, Ilene Zatt, a certified Feng Shui consultant in Sag Harbor. "Since art, and the placement of symbols and color, are all so important in my line of work," said Zatt, "Erica's amazing talents are indispensable to me. I love working with her – her gorgeous work really transforms a space."

Erica-Lynn Huberty, at Blossom Haven Decorative Painting & Design, can be reached at 631-725-4785.

Somebody Stop Me!

Listed in the classified section of Dan's Papers are ads for architects, carpenters, construction companies, electricians, fence companies, handymen, landscapers, masons, pool companies and a host of other people offering home improvement services. But try as you may, you will not find an ad for a Stop the Work Consultant. What an untapped market!

Anyone who has begun a home improvement project discovers – alas, too late – the unfortunate fact of life that one project leads to another, which leads to yet another, with no end in sight. There is no such thing as doing one small project. This is where the Stop the Work Consultant comes in. Such a person would advise the homeowner on when to stop adding new projects. The Stop the Work Consultant could charge a fee, which would be a percentage of the cost of the project or projects not undertaken. An example will illustrate.

The pool in question

Take an actual homeowner in the North Sea area – we'll call him DS to protect him from all the contractors who read this article and realize that he is not protected by a Stop the Work Consultant. DS decided to put in a pool and patio. After he signed the contract, he learned that the grading of his property made it necessary to build a small stone wall near the pool. So, he added that on. Of course, once the pool and wall were complete, it became clear that the area just in front of and behind the wall presented the perfect location for a perennial garden. And wasn't it time to re-grade and re-seed the lawn, which was beaten up by the pool contractors' trucks? Oh, and the fence, which is required when you build a pool, yielded another landscaping project, because privets are needed to hide the fence parts that are not made of wood. And then, because the perennial garden is so lovely, it is becoming necessary to start other gardens in areas that now look sort of bare. By the way, the driveway is starting to look rather bedraggled next to the lovely re-planted front yard.

When does it stop? DS feels helpless. He wonders whether he will have to sell his home just to pay for all this work. This is where the Stop the Work Consultant comes in. If DS had retained such an advisor, he might have been told to complete the fence (state law requires it) and the lawn (it was really ugly from the trucks), but to plant only a small number of perennials this year. Then wait until next year and future years to plant additional perennials and to gussy up the driveway. And perhaps baby privets could be planted, at far less cost than large privets; they grow fast anyway. These reduced projects are worth thousands of dollars. The Stop the Work Consultant could have charged a fee of, say, $1,500, saving me – uh, DS – lots of money.

The Stop the Work Consultant can advise on indoor projects, too. Yes, gut the kitchen, but save the bathrooms for another year. Finish the basement, but build the guest house later. Install the pool, but forget the tennis court for now. Put an upstairs office in the garage, but don't install central air in the house. The list goes on and on.

Yes, to the inexperienced and naïve, the need to avoid all these extra projects may seem self-evident, and the task of such avoidance appears obvious. But anyone who has ever started that one small project knows that we do not live in such a Utopia of limited home improvement. This is a dangerous world, particularly in this hotbed of home improvement known as the East End.

Think about the money a Stop the Work Consultant could make. Let's assume, very conservatively for the sake of argument, that the Consultant stops each client each year from spending an average of $10,000. Well, we all know what a huge market this is. A particular consultant could easily have 25-50 clients every year. That's $250,000 to $500,000 of costs avoided. If the Stop the Work Consultant charges a mere 20% of costs avoided, that's $50,000 to $100,000 every year, for a just few day's consulting work!

Hmm. Now that I think about it, perhaps this will be my next business endeavor.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Nurturing Garden Magic

This is Part 2 of an article on clematis. This part provides information on how to grow, cultivate, and care for this winning garden plant.

Clematis is not for those seeking immediate gratification. The plant may not be a prolific bloomer until the third season. Clematis can also be finicky to establish. Taking a few careful steps ensures years of pleasure.

Now is an ideal time to get started. Planting clematis in spring provides maximum growth the first year and establishes strong roots to carry the plant through the first winter. It also ensures flowers in the second season. The plant may die back during the first winter. However, well-established roots ensure regeneration the second season and prosperity thereafter.

Because of its popularity, clematis is readily available through garden shops and plant catalogs. Specialty catalogs devoted to clematis offer the greatest selection of some of the more prized/unusual species.

When purchasing clematis, try to select plants with multiple stems, green growth, and large roots. If you buy bare root plants, purchase those with some evident growth at the crown and large, moist roots.

Select a location receiving a minimum of six hours of sun daily. Locations with dappled sunlight and protection during the heat of the day also work well. This type of location is especially good for the pastel, large-flowered hybrids that fade in full sun.

The selected location needs excellent air circulation to discourage fungus, and the soil needs to be enriched to ensure good nutrition/drainage. The ideal soil pH is neutral (7.0). Cultivate the soil to 24 inches deep and two feet wide. Add about one-third by volume of compost, rotted manure, and/or peat to the excavated soil. If the soil is acid, add a few handfuls of garden lime to correct the pH, and some bone meal for added phosphorous.

Once the soil is refined, refill the hole, leaving a depression to accommodate the clematis's roots. If the growing stems are long, cut them back to about a foot in length. Plant the vine with the crown about two inches below the soil surface. This helps the plant recover from damage or disease. Once situated at the proper depth, backfill with the soil and water well. Cover the area with about three inches of mulch to ensure the roots remain cool.

Newly planted clematis require about an inch of water weekly during the first season, less thereafter. Fertilize the vine one month after planting with a 4:1:2 ratio fertilizer. Thereafter, fertilize once annually to maintain a neutral soil pH and to offer nourishment.

Clematis require support, unless the vine is to scramble on its own over a low wall, small tree, or stump. Clematis use twining petioles to grow, so the vines cannot grasp branches or trellises on their own and must be tied. Use of a tree as a backdrop produces a fantastic effect provided the close proximity of the tree will not compete for soil nutrients.

Clematis is generally trouble free, but is susceptible to stem rot and leaf spot called "wilt." The large-flowered hybrids seem especially susceptible. Wilt can occur at any time, but typically appears just as the flower buds open. The whole plant can be infected, or, more frequently, one or two stems will collapse. If you notice stems wilting, immediately remove the stems below the diseased areas. Plants normally recover from buds lower on the stem.

If air circulation around the vine is insufficient, clematis may be susceptible to powdery mildew. This occurs in July or August on the East End when humidity is high. Treatment with a common garden fungicide helps prevent mildew (it is also good for other mildew-susceptible plants such as hollyhocks and roses).

As with many other garden plants, aphids, slugs, and earwigs love to munch on the leaves and stems of clematis. While it is virtually impossible to eliminate these pests, the use of preventative measures to control these pests is a good thing to do.

Over the years, we have become devoted to clematis and cannot wait each spring for the surge of flowers. Careful selection can provide continuous displays from late spring through fall. While not the easiest of plants, clematis is worth the effort it takes to establish this magical garden plant.

How To Choose Subcontractors For Renovation Projects

As I described in this supplement's cover story, "The Oregon Road House," you never know what you'll find when you start to take apart an old house. If you're lucky, you'll find fascinating mementos and solid construction techniques. If not, you might find rot, termite damage, and poor framing.

But whatever the size of your project or age of your structure, having a ready list of qualified people to step in is invaluable to keeping the project moving ahead.

In the Oregon Road renovation, we chose a local contractor, Reinhardt O'Brien Contracting of Cutchogue, to build and oversee the addition as well as to customize much of the interior, since they have a cabinet shop here on the North Fork.

Other subcontactors we hired ourselves, including electricians, masons, plumbers, landscapers and so on. We soon chose to stay exclusively with local tradespeople, not only because they are available almost around the clock in emergencies, but also because they live here and will be driving by your house on a regular basis and want to be proud of their work! The guy from up the island may do a fine job, but once he's done he may not be coming back, as we learned the hard way with a tradesman who left before his job was finished. Not only did he never come back, he didn't even return phone calls. This was just one more reason to "shop" locally.

When looking for someone to do renovation work, make sure that they are licensed, as in the case of electricians and plumbers, or ask to see some of their previous work, as in the case of landscapers and painters. Though this sounds obvious, it is the step most people skip, opting instead to hire the first person to return their call. This is a panic response and one, I can assure you, you should ALWAYS avoid. People who do good work are in demand and they may take a few days to return your call, but the wait will be worth it when you see their finished product.

If your renovation involves high end materials and craftsmanship – such as natural stone, English or European plumbing fixtures, and custom cabinets or built-ins – as many projects do these days, make certain that your tradesmen are familiar with the installation and/or maintenance of these materials. Tumbled marble tiles and marble and granite counters should be installed by professionals, and have to be sealed initially and periodically after that. Stone should also never be cleaned with harsh, commercial products. Stone suppliers, such as Southampton Brick & Tile, sell products that won't damage your expensive stonework but will keep it gleaming.

Carpenter Noel Gaines and assistant in the barn at the Oregon Road House

Not all carpenters are created equal, so when it comes to custom work, ask to see previous work that is typical of what they offer. Different jobs suit different carpenters, so ask what they specialize in. In the case of our barn renovation, Noel Gaines of Cutchogue brought experience with such specific projects to the table, having spent many years on the North Fork renovating old buildings, including his own current house.

Last but not least, ask for references. People will be surprisingly candid when asked for their opinions. And while word travels fast if someone is known for excellent work, it travels faster when the work is substandard. So listen carefully. Oh, and if someone tells you he or she prefers to take jobs outside of the area where their business is located, run, don't walk, to the next candidate. The local guy who's bound to run into you at the post office wants you to be happy to see him. And he'll be happy to see you, too, as long as you've paid your bill. Remember, the hammer swings both ways.

If You Can't Zap 'Em, Eat 'Em

With spring finally at our doorsteps after a rather chilly winter, most are welcoming the new season of change with open arms. In a matter of only a couple of weeks, the outdoor world has begun to transform from a bleak, gray backdrop to a canvas sprinkled with greens and yellows as everything that had been hibernating wakes up and starts anew. The trees begin to bud. The crocuses and tulips start to poke through the soil in your neighbor's front yard. You start to hear the neighborhood children's playful laughter till way into the evening since daylight savings gives them a few more hours to indulge.

Spring is a season when everything comes back to life. The trees, the animals, the flowers, the bushes, the grass, and, of course, the bugs. They are the little rascals that you frantically swat away at the beach, the ones that land all over your food at your picnic in the park, and of course, the ultimate favorite: the friendly mosquitoes who like to suck your blood. The little buggers should really be called vampire bugs if you ask me. But, in the same breath, I can admit that mosquitoes have withstood thousands of evolutionary years, and unfortunately this year is not bound to be any different. With the sweet must come the sour, so with the joyful spring, there is sure to be the nuisance vampire bugs and other insects to drive you up the wall.

So how do we deal with the little buggers? Zap them? Destroy them? Or just learn to live with them and the irritating itching that goes along with their bite. Fortunately for the zapper-invention era that we live in, there are tons of gadgets to ward off the flyers and crawlers that you don't care for.

Whether you invest in a traditional bug zapper, such as the model made by Flowtron, to eliminate your night flyers, or even newer Mosquito Terminators or Mosquito Power Traps, you hope that something with those sorts of names have the zap to eliminate your insect problem.

However, according to a study published in Entomological News (1996), bug zappers are not very efficient at eliminating female mosquitoes, which are the ones that like to sink their fangs into us during the warmer months. Instead, the numbers from the suburban study revealed that almost 50 percent of the bugs killed in the electrocuter black light traps were harmless non-predator insects who provide food for the nearby ecological systems. Meanwhile, the ones that bite remain unaffected and ready to attack.

But zappers are not your only option. You can also try another model of bug eliminator called the Mosquito Deleto from Coleman, which catches mosquitoes on sticky paper while attracting the little guys with heat, CO2 and octenol.

Or you can also try out the new zappers – without the zap. For example, the Insectivoro, designed by Mo-El, uses light and suction to entrap the Nuisance pests. This is especially appealing to those who are prohibited from full backyard relaxation by the traditional zip-zip-zap-zap sounds of the bug zapper inventions. With the Insectivoro or other non-zappers, people can enjoy their outdoor time without the alarming sizzles in the background.

One other approach to the bug problem. You can eat them. It may sound a bit strange, but people around the world have been eating bugs since the beginning of time. Whether it be cicadas, crickets or wood lice, global cuisine has utilized the natural world and incorporated it into their kitchens for centuries. According to a recent Newsday article, the "Adventures in the Global Kitchen" preview at the Museum of Natural History in NYC was a great "taste" of that approach to curtailing bug problems. The three delectibles served that day at the museum were mealworm pizza, waxworm-and-oatmeal trail mix and cricket-topped tamales. More insect tasting will go on at the museum, and other edible bug options can also be found at www.grubco.com. Caution is suggested in regard to eating any of the prickly or colorful bugs such as caterpillars (although some from Thailand are said to be good), as well as ones found in the home, and not in the wild. But otherwise, bon appetit, ladies and gentlemen!

Happy Camper

Summer camping is one of the most fulfilling ways to experience the natural beauty of our area. What better way to feel the fullness of summer than to wake with the sunrise and fall asleep gazing up at the stars? I usually associate camping with mountains and forests, but out here we can immerse ourselves in a completely different environment. The ocean and the mountains share a similar power, one that instills awe and respect from anyone who takes a moment for appreciation.

Even though the Hamptons are known for classy clubs and expensive hotels, the reason this area became popular in the first place was the natural beauty, the pristine sand dunes, the beach grass, and the clean Atlantic waves. So if you're coming out for a weekend, or if you just want to get out of the house and do something different with your Friday night, consider camping. It's cheap, fulfilling, and there is nothing to distract you from your camping buddies except for beauty and a little chill in the air. No television. No long lines at the bar, or at the bathroom for that matter. Camping offers freedom, and for me, it's a breath of reality that is sometimes lost in the glitz of Hamptons summers. What exactly are our options on this long island?

Cedar Point County Park offers 607 acres of protected ground right here in East Hampton. Sections of the park are blessed with sweeping views of Gardiner's Bay, and there is also plenty of wooded area for hiking and wildlife viewing. Fishing, hiking, rowboat rentals, picnicking, and beach access are all a part of a camping experience here. Cedar Point was settled in 1651, and it was once a bustling port of trade between East Hampton and Sag Harbor. The lighthouse, built in 1860, makes a good landmark to keep you on track during a hike along a winding trail. On Saturday nights in the summer, the general store at Cedar Point plays family movies outside on the lawn, so after a long day of soaking in the summer, you can kick back to a movie and a fire. You can reserve a spot for camping at Cedar Point to ensure your trip's success. Cedar Point is open Friday, Saturday, and Sunday until May 16, and then it will be open seven days a week for the summer season. Call 244-7275 for camping reservations.

Another great option for summer camping will urge you to take my favorite drive, that smooth cruise down Old Montauk Highway. Hither Hills State Park, on South Fairview Avenue in Montauk, is a 165-site campground right on the ocean. The total area of the park is 1755 acres of woodlands and sand dunes. There are activities like baseball and fishing, and the campsites are sand-swept. The Napeague walking dunes are located on the eastern border of the park. The dunes were named not because they are so pleasant to walk through, but because they themselves seem to be walking as they shift with the winds. Walking through the dunes is magical, bare feet sinking into sun-soaked sand. After a day wandering through the walking dunes or fishing or kayaking, you can head back to the oceanfront campsite, each of which has its own picnic table.

Hither Hills is open year round from sunrise to sunset, and camping is available from early April to mid-November. You can reserve a spot through the MISTIX Corporation by calling 1-800-456-CAMP or call Hither Hills directly at 516-668-2554.

These are just two of the many camping options out here on our beautiful island. Remember, the meteor shower is in August. If you snag a campsite for then, you'll have your choice of wishes as shooting stars streak across the sky over your campfire.

Take A Seat

A chair is a chair, is a chair, is a chair. Right? Wrong. A chair is merely a place to sit. Right? Wrong, again. When it comes to chairs, there's nothing new under the sun. Right? Au contraire, mon frere. Believe it or not, I'm talking about plain chairs that do nothing but sit there, so you can sit, not stand. I'm not talking fancy massage chairs, recliners, or home theater seats. I'm talking four legs, a back and a seat. Read on, brothers and sisters.

Vitra AG's "La Chaise" (above)
In 1946, Charles Eames and his brother Roy unveiled the first one-piece mass produced chair. Their molded plywood chair brought comfort, style and affordability. The design was a single shell that was comfortable without padding. One of their notable fiberglass reinforced plastic chairs, the La Chaise, which was designed in 1948, has been back in production since 1990 and is available from Vitra. The name of the chair is a pun on sculptor Gaston Lachaise's name, and an acknowledgement of his influence on the design.

Umbra's Oh! Chair (below)
The award-winning Oh! Chair brought Karim Rashid's sophisticated, modern design to the Bed, Bath & Beyond set and the dorm room. Bright, fun and hip, these chairs are affordable and comfortable. The one-piece molded plastic design and steel legs make these chairs ideal for indoors and durable enough for outside. Mass production makes them affordable, at around $50, and a sly commentary on consumer culture at the same time, as anything big, cheap and plastic surely must be. Think of it as a sardonic wink of a chair

Like a supersonic jet that whisks you off no place racier than dreamland, the Frank Gehry designed SuperLight from Emeco is the most recent way to add a modernist touch to where you dump your derrière. Of his design for the SuperLight, the famed architect says, "I tried to extract the essence – structure and skin, where engineering and design are one thing." Emeco, not always at the pinnacle of high-fashion, was founded in 1944 to make all aluminum chairs for U.S. submarines during WWII. The 1006 Navy chair is still in production, and now enjoys a sort of geek-chic popularity. The SuperLight sells for around $350..

The 1006 Navy Chair

Qui's Oloz Lounge and Ottoman (above)
Guido and Francesca Zwicker's Edizioni Qui collection reflect a symbiotic relationship between form and function. The comfy Oloz Lounge begs to be sat on just as much as it does to be looked at. At $3,150 for the Lounge and $1,590 for the Ottoman, this chair carries the price-tags of artwork, and comfort to match. The Lounge is available in a variety of colors to match any decor, but still features the same sharp Italian styling no matter the shade. You will also want to check out their modular Loungescape set which can be customized to the client's wishes.

For The Kid Inside

You've got the house all set up for the upcoming summer, and the children are ready and excited to run around in the sunny backyard. You can't wait until the weather is nice, when the kids love to play outside and are out of your hair, at least for a little while. They run. They jump. They laugh. They climb. They scream. They fall. And then the cycle begins all over again. This continues until about the third time around, when suddenly the kids race into the house screaming, "Mom, I'm bored!"

And then out of nowhere, it's time to create an idea for what they can do to entertain themselves. "Hide-and-go-seek?" No, they don't like that game. "Mother, may I?" Nope, that's for the younger kids. "Arts and crafts?" No, that's lame. (Plus, that's a good one for when it rains.) "How about tag, an old favorite?" And the overall consensus is a "That's boring" as they hound you for some more ingenuity.

Need some ideas? Maybe even though you thought your house was ready for the upcoming summer, it isn't. How's the backyard? Is there anything for the kids to play with or on, besides the fresh-cut lawn and your azaleas? Maybe it's time to look into some playgrounds, swings, slides or sandboxes for the kids. It is a well known fact that children have a never-ending supply of energy that anyone over twenty-five wishes they could have a mere fraction of, so maybe it's worth the extra effort now for peace of mind later.

When looking at backyard extras, there are tons of options available. A popular idea is a trampoline. Although it's one simple self-standing entity, it can provide endless hours of fun, not to mention the amount of energy it takes to jump up and down on one for more than 10 minutes. It's a great workout for the kids, as well as a great place for them to expend all that bottled up energy. They will sleep like babies after jumping around on one all day. Trampolines range in price, obviously depending on size as well as make, but they start at a couple hundred and continue up into thousands. For safety reasons, especially for the younger tykes, some of the models have safety netting enclosures. And from what I hear, falling off onto one's head is not a nice feeling.

The newest craze with trampolines is setting them up at ground level. You dig up a big hole in the backyard and place the trampoline in the hole, allowing your children to jump high, but if they fall, it's significantly closer to the ground. This is the type of equipment now used at gym facilities that provide trampoline classes.

Other options for backyard fun include air jumpers, which resemble blown-up enclosed air castles with trampolines inside. Or, if your children are into the more extreme sports, you can consider building a rock wall for climbing. Although this generally requires a bit more supervision, you can buy the wall in separate tiles and limit how tall you want the structure to be. Also, with the rock wall, there is lots of variety, as there are lots of extra pegs and accessories available to change up the course.

And lastly, if your child enjoys sports that involve pavement more than the grass, like BMXing or skateboarding, you can always invest in a half-pipe for the driveway; just make sure to also invest in some elbow, wrist and knee pads for them as well.

But whatever it is that you decide to put in the backyard for your children's entertainment, just remember that a bit of time and money well spent now may save you some time and aggravation later. It may be worth it for a little more peace and quiet. Just imagine sipping iced tea in the shade.

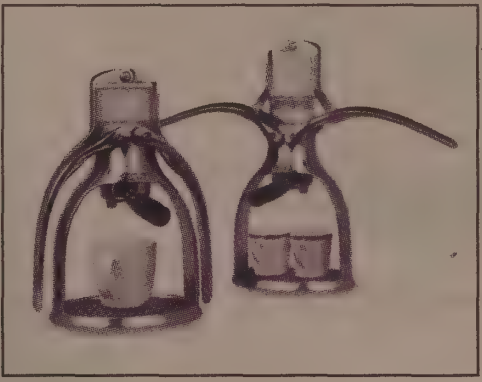
Ma's Coffee Pot Ain't What It Used To Be

My mother recently installed a Miele coffee machine in her kitchen, and it's a big mother. This thing is no coffee pot, nor is it even a coffee maker. Buick might be more like it.



Presso's manually operated espresso maker

My grandmother, a little old Italian lady, is understandably confused by the monster in my parents' kitchen. She's accustomed to a pot you put on the stove to boil to make demitasse (or, Italian black coffee), which you garnish with a lemon rind and a bit of Sambuca or Anisette. If you are my Uncle Frank, you might use more than a bit.

I have to admit, when I first saw the Miele on the counter I was dubious. This behemoth must be built into your counter and cabinets, not merely plugged into the wall. The idea is that you have fresh ground coffee at the push of a button, one cup at a time. You fill up the hopper with a pound of your favorite whole bean coffee, fill up the water tank, and that's it. When you want a cup of coffee all you do, George Jetson, is push a button on the front of the machine for a mug, cup or shot, the beans grind up right then, and out comes steaming fresh brewed java. And it's good. Well, it's good if you calibrate the machine's on-board computer properly, and use good beans, like those from the Hampton Coffee Company in Water Mill. My Mom swears by their Hampton Classic blend, and cringes at putting anything else in her Miele. As a matter of fact, I think she's getting a few pounds of that Hampton Classic overnighted to her for Mother's Day from her ever-lovin' son.

After I first saw the Miele machine in my Mom's kitchen, I had some weird Bradbury dreams about it. I dreamt that I was making a cup of coffee while my mother was preparing a holiday meal. Now, when there's a holiday meal being cooked at my house, there is food in various stages of preparation on every available surface. From shrimp being peeled on the counter to pies on the island. That's what the kitchen looked like in the dream, and when I pushed the button on the Miele, coffee filled my cup and didn't stop coming out. I grabbed another cup and it filled, too. Then another and another like Lucille Ball in that chocolate factory, but the coffee just kept coming. Coffee spilled everywhere until finally hot coffee shot out of the machine as if it were a firehose, drenching everything and ruining dinner. I woke up in a cold sweat, but like I said, I've come around.

One truly unique and innovative way to make coffee comes from Presso, an innovation on the French press method of making coffee, which looks kind of like a nutcracker. Loaded with finely ground coffee and boiling water, the Presso makes a perfect double shot of espresso when its arms are plunged downward. Made of solid polished aluminum with a simple and elegant design, the Presso is a striking addition to any coffee-making arsenal.

Keurig is another company that specializes in one cup at a time coffee makers. The small, home models (they also make commercial models mostly used in offices) look a bit like aliens sitting on your counter, and you are likely to either enjoy the convenience that their "K-Cups" afford you, or be turned off by the limitations. The K-Cup is a small plastic pack not unlike the containers used to hold half and half at diners. These containers hold ground coffee, sealed for freshness, enough for one cup. The "K-Cup" is loaded into the machine and again, the magic button is pushed, and out comes steaming coffee. The drawback is you have to get your K-Cups from Keurig, and right now they're available in a limited number of brands including Timothy's, Gloria Jean's, and Green Mountain. You can also brew single cups of tea with K-Cups from Bigelow and Celestial Seasonings.

While it might be impressive to have a coffee maker that looks like the big old espresso machine that the leprechaun uses to kill a barista in Leprechaun 2, not everyone has that kind of space in the kitchen. And even those who do might not want to deal with all the headaches of running an Italian espresso bar in their kitchen. But if you are looking for the touch of class those machines bring, you might want to check out La Pavoni's cast brass and copper lever pull espresso machine with wooden handgrips. It stands just 11 inches high, and has a 16 oz. boiler that takes about 10 minutes to heat up. The wooden grips have a nice feel and the whole machine looks great, especially the large retro gauges up top.

So long as there are dollars brewing in the coffee culture, your options won't be limited to Braun and Black & Decker pots that are about as chic as a cup of coffee from McDonalds.

Shaping Your Home With Style

Located at the corner of Station Road and Montauk Highway (at the traffic light) in Water Mill, Perimeters is the latest venture of parent company, Riverhead Building Supply Corp. Although the 55-year-old family-owned company has showrooms located in several of its retail locations, Perimeters is something special. Catering to the discerning homeowner seeking personal attention with their custom selections, the staff at Perimeters will welcome you and spend the time necessary to explain the choices available in Made To Order® windows and doors from Marvin as well as kitchen cabinets and counter top surfaces.

More than this, however, you'll be able to see for yourself the quality of construction and unique design elements in the product lines featured at Perimeters, since they are displayed in home-like surroundings. For instance, the Marvin Wood Ultimate Double Hung display allows you to "Build Your Own Window" by interchanging up to eleven upper and lower sash parts with various grilles and glazing options to see which combination is exactly right for your project.

Perhaps it's a unique wood species you're interested in for your windows. Our display of solid, genuine mahogany Ultimate Wood Double Hung windows combined with genuine mahogany Tilt N Turn units demonstrates the production capabilities and attention to detail that Marvin is famous for. And, if there's something really unique you're after, be sure to check out our "Beach Scene" picture window. Although you may not want grilles shaped like beach grasses and seagulls, you'll see first hand that the Marvin factory can do just about anything you have in mind. If you can put it on paper, chances are they can build it.

The unique displays at Perimeters aren't just limited to windows and doors. The built-in displays of custom and semi-custom kitchen cabinets, occupying half of the 3,000 square foot showroom, are meant to spark your imagination with creative storage solutions as well as interesting design elements.

With three kitchen designers on staff, you'll benefit from a broad range of experience and design influences to make your kitchen design exactly what you've imagined. A good kitchen designer can actually enhance the quality of your lifestyle by incorporating a range of design details that will please your sense of space and transform your kitchen into a completely new environment. Many of these design elements, which range from the color and species of wood chosen, to counter surfaces, hardware and storage features are on display in our showroom. In fact, a selection of nearly 100 door styles of various hardwoods and finishes are on display from quality cabinet manufacturers such as Wood-Mode, Brookhaven, TeddWood, Millbrook, Kemper and UltraCraft.

So, if you're planning the construction of a new home or remodeling, it's worth a visit to Perimeters – at the light in Water Mill – to experience all the possibilities of exceptional design.

Perimeters is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Phone 631-996-3300 or visit us on the web at www.PerimetersForTheHome.com.

Photographs in CyberSpace

How many of you out there have ever received an email with a picture either attached to the email or inserted in the body of the email? These days sending and receiving email with pictures attached to them is a commonplace activity. Have you ever wondered why the picture in the email doesn't always fit on your computer screen? In many cases the image is way too big, making it impossible to view the entire image at the same time. You end up scrolling up and down, and left and right to see the picture. What a pain in the neck, right? So, what's going on here, why does this happen?

Cyber-shot U

Well, the short answer is that, generally, email is a dumb program. When you open an image in email, the email program performs a one-to-one pixel mapping. Pixels are the dots or squares of color that make up an image. Generally the more pixels or dots of color an image contains, the better the quality of the picture. Digital cameras are categorized by how many pixels they contain. A four megapixel camera produces images that contain four million pixels. When you view a digital image using your email program, in most cases each pixel in the image is mapped to a pixel on your computer monitor. If the resolution (the number of pixels across times the number of pixels down) of the image is greater than the resolution of your monitor, then the entire image will not fit on your screen.

How an image is displayed in your email is, by and large, a factor of two things: the resolution of the image and the resolution your computer monitor is set to. The good news is that both these things can be easily changed. You can change the resolution of an image before you take the picture by changing the image resolution settings in your digital camera (how many of you out there didn't know you could do that; raise your hands). Or, you can change the resolution of an image after you take the picture via photo editing software like Adobe Photoshop.

Computer monitor resolution can be changed via the control panel in the Windows operating system. Most people have their monitor resolution set to either 1024x768 or 800x600. If you have a 4 megapixel camera and you take a picture using the highest possible resolution setting (roughly 2288x1712) and then email that picture to someone who has their monitor set to 1024x768, 2288 image pixels across exceeds the monitor display of 1024 pixels across. Also 1712 pixels down doesn't fit into 768 pixels down. Hence, the image overflows the screen and you have to scroll around to view different parts of the image.

So, what do you do if your not so tech savvy mom is constantly complaining that pictures you send her of her grandson don't fit on her screen? Simple, change the resolution of the image before you send it to her. There are many software editing programs out there on the market that allow you to change image resolution. If you're really lucky, the software that came with your camera will include this capability. Some software even allows you to change image resolution and attach the image to an email with just a few mouse clicks. What could be easier? Mom will be so pleased.

Happy Mother's Day

Mother's Day is a time to show your appreciation for the woman who sometimes gets neglected as we become more and more absorbed with our own lives. Have you ever watched a baby's eyes as his or her mother approaches? It's as if the sun had just risen for the first time on a world that had been, until then, dark. This week is a reminder. Mom is not just the woman who used to clean up every type of mess you made. She's also a woman who probably doesn't mind being pampered, and the day to indulge her is here. Pink is the color of femininity and of springtime. Follow the example springtime sets as pink tulips poke through well-watered soil. Think pink and think of Mom.

Kitchenaid Mixer

There's something different about this KitchenAid Mixer – it's pink! This popular appliance is now available at Williams-Sonoma for $249.95. When you purchase the Pink Artisan mixer, WS will donate $50 to the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation. Nothing beats the Kitchen Aid mixer when it comes to making dough for cookies, so before you give it to Mom, use it just once to bake her a batch! You can continue with the pink theme at Williams-Sonoma with pink mixing bowls, which come in sets of three for $19, or convenient pink "spoonulas" for $9 apiece. If you're not the baking type, bring a strawberry bundt cake, $14 from Williams Sonoma, for dessert.

This uniquely designed vase glows with a pink hue. It is crafted in the Smaland province of Sweden, "beautiful to behold and soothing to the touch". It's called Atoll, designed by Anna Ehrner, and is available at Rose Jewelers in Southampton for $100. It's beautiful and inidividual, and makes a perfect gift for Mom. Fill it with pink tulips to make Mother's Day even more festive.

Atoll Vase from Rose Jewlers

Betsey Johnson's Heart Ring

You can find this pink heart ring at Betsey Johnson in East Hampton for under $40! It sparkles in any light, and it will make your mom feel glamorous and girlish. Head down to the Betsey Johnson Boutique for anything pink – you'll find that even the walls are tinged rose.

Pink Needlepoint Pillows are $89 each at Marders in Bridgehampton. These lovely throw pillows are great decorations that will remind your mom of your thoughtfulness every time she lays down on the couch to rest her bones. The vibrant reds and pinks make this pillow one of the biggest sellers at Marders.

Growing Flowers With Growing Children

Now that spring has sprung and the bulbs that we meticulously planted in November are beginning to emerge from the ground, it is time to focus on our vegetable gardens. We get caught up in the thrill of turning the soil and planning which vegetables to plant. We start to leaf through gardening books and magazines to find inspiration. But let us not forget about the younger generation. Children can find fun and enjoyment in gardening, too. Why not start a child's vegetable garden this year? A child's garden is an excellent way to allow little ones the opportunity to learn about plants and gardening, and expand and nurture their minds as their gardens mature.

Start by selecting a small area within or next to your garden. Give them enough space to plan a 4x4 garden. It is best if the garden can be a raised bed, perhaps an oversized terra cotta pot or wooden barrel. This will make it easier for them to work on their personal gardens. Next, you and your children will have to select the vegetables or plants they want for their new garden. Keep them involved as much as possible and remember it is their garden, so have an open mind when they begin to choose plant materials. If your children decide on a plant that really does not work for their garden, try to educate them on why it does not work rather than just saying no. This is an educational journey for them as well as a fun activity. A good rule of thumb, since children can be restless, is to choose plants that grow quickly, and are easy, colorful and interesting to look at. Flowers are a must for a child's garden.

Try to encourage your children to select plants such as cherry tomatoes, runner beans, radishes and salad greens. These plants grow quickly and are the perfect size for small hands to maintain. Morning glories, dwarf marigolds, beets, yellow bush beans and Swiss chard will also work for the small gardener. Vegetables that take a while to grow and mature may lose the interest of your younger children.

Remember to show your young gardeners the basic techniques of gardening, such as how to weed and water weekly, thinning out seedlings and how to train vine plants to grow up a trellis or string. Do not let their first gardening experience end in frustration. Try to offer the proper guidance to make their first garden a truly successful growing experience, for them as well as their plants. For instance, having smaller gardening tools will help give them the confidence to grow a beautiful garden. Many garden centers offer kid-friendly gardening tools and accessories. One other way to maintain a child's interest in a garden is to introduce projects along the way. There are many ways to spark a child's imagination. One project to personalize the garden would be to create little vegetable shaped garden markers. Have your children paint the markers themselves and place them in the garden to mark their vegetables.

A favorite activity is releasing ladybugs into the garden. Every child will find this extremely exciting and educational. Just be sure to read the directions properly. Ladybugs should be released later in the day when the sun is going down. This way they will continue to dwell in your child's garden throughout the summer. With a successful first year garden, your young gardener will want to grow more and more wonderful vegetables and beautiful flowers each year. Their appreciation and love of the garden and nature will last a lifetime.

With any gardening or landscaping project, always take into consideration the factors of your property. Is there enough sun? Are the soil conditions good for growing? How can I keep out the deer and rabbits? Checking these factors will help to ensure the garden's success.

NEW KIDS ON THE BLOCK

From the moment you walk through the big wooden door of the new Old Quogue and Farm Florist, which sits nicely on the corner of Old Depot Road and Montauk Highway in Quogue, you will immediately feel at home in this unique and eclectic gift shop. The wind chimes sing a happy greeting while the scent of orchids, pine, and gardenias tickle your fancy. There are bursts of color everywhere; perched on the shelves amongst the exotic flowers are bowls and vases that are handmade of ceramic and shells, fancy bejeweled picture frames and dried flowers all arranged amongst aromatic candles and gothic candelabras here. The gift shop also has greeting cards, party favors, chocolates, napkins and they will even gift-wrap. There are also three greenhouses filled with trees, hanging and potted plants, exotic tropicals, bulbs and everything your green thumb needs to make your garden grow.

This is the new Old Quogue Farm & Florist, previously called Botanica. It's new because it has been recently purchased and revamped by landscape artist Frank De Vito and his wife Laura along with local artist Greta Stapf Waterman, and old because this beautiful "Garden of Eden" has graced the Hamptons for many decades. Its original owner, a local landscaper named James Fraser, purchased the farm in 1912 and called the place Fraser's. Today, the newest owners, Frank, Laura and Greta, decided to call the florist The Old Quogue Farm & Florist in honor of its roots. Probably one of the most creative things this trio has done was to hire manager and floral designer Jody Busch, who has twenty years of floral arranging and an outstanding eye for outrageous and exotic floral designs.

The Old Quogue Farm & Florist is open seven days a week, 9-6 Sunday-Thursday and 9-7 Friday and Saturday. It is a full florist with Teleflora capabilities and delivery is available. They can be reached at 631-653-4145 or log onto their website at: www.oldquogueflorist.com.

Facing the famed Georgica Estates residential area of East Hampton, newcomer Georgica Bend Bed & Breakfast, 156 Montauk Highway (on the north side of the road, formerly called Snug Country Cottage), has opened their doors and are welcoming guests to enjoy total privacy and a sense of countryside calm.

Georgica Bend is an up to date, quiet country B&B that is within walking distance to beautiful Georgica Pond. Owned by Steve Russell and Sean Sullivan, there are five guest rooms, four with a king or queen bed and private baths. The sun porch has twin beds and a private (non-adjacent) bath. The two guest rooms on the first floor have fireplaces, and the two rooms on the second floor share a sunny reading lounge. All of the rooms have air conditioning and ceiling fans to ensure comfort.

Outdoors there are specimen trees and neat lawns with gardens that are offset by a deck with ample seating for breakfast, and a twenty-four foot heated pool and hot tub.

Breakfasts are served in the continental style, with cereals, fruits, juices, coffees, teas and a variety of breads. Accomplished cooks, bakers and home canners, owners Steve Russell and Sean Sullivan also feature a special home-baked treat every morning such as fresh muffins, coffee cake and sweet rolls and homemade jams and preserves to compliment them. Unique accompaniments such as tangerine marmalade, ginger, lemon and honey jam, and spiced peach preserves are just a few of the breakfast spreads to be found on the morning buffet.

Open year round, Georgica Bend Bed & Breakfast is ideally located and near East Hampton's many attractions and activities. Three fine restaurants are within walking distance, yet the location on the apex of the big bend in the Montauk Highway affords total privacy. For information and reservations call them at 631-324-4920.

Opposite the monument at One Montauk Highway in Bridgehampton, a new restaurant has emerged. Formerly the "American Bistro", Ocean Grille is now owned by Betty and Michael Zebetti and their son John. The owners of Noyac/Sag Harbor's famous Giordano's Restaurant has made this

Of course! Mom would love a gift certificate from Zebra. She can indulge in a wonderful massage. Or she can take Astanga, Hot yoga, Jivamukti, Vinyasa, Pilates Mat, or a Beginners' class. Now that's different.

Mom's The Word

This Sunday, how about breakfast in bed and some much needed pampering? Sound appealing? There's one proviso, though. You must have changed your fair share of dirty diapers, had one or three sleepless nights and answer to the name, Mom, Mum, Mamma, or Mamacita. Because it's Mother's Day once again – the time of year when we have the chance to show our appreciation for all the things our mothers, or mother's mothers, have done and do for us on a daily basis. Being a mother is the hardest job in the world and this Sunday is one day that we can all remember to say thank you. Even if we forget the other 364 days of the year. But where did this incredibly worthwhile tradition begin?

As a Brit I was interested to discover that Mother's Day, whilst originating in Greece, was actually made popular in England in the early 1600s. The way it began was that servants in old England who worked away from home were given Mothering Sunday as a day to go home and visit their mothers. With them they would bring a cake called the mothering cake as a gift and the servants would spend quality time at home with Mum and then head back to work. This tradition quickly spread through Europe and by 1872 Mother's Day made a breakthrough in the USA and was celebrated for the first time in Boston. By 1907 Ana Jarvis from Philadelphia began a national campaign to commemorate her mother's death and the idea of a day every year dedicated to mothers. Smart mommas cottoned on to this idea, and by 1911 most people had adopted the tradition throughout the US. It became so popular that in1914 president Wilson pronounced the second Sunday of May a national holiday for Mothers in the United States.

All over the world Mother's Day is celebrated on different days of the year, a fact that I discovered when I failed to send my Mum, or as you would call her, Mom, a gift, not realizing that it was Mother's Day in England when I was here in the States. A mistake I won't be repeating, Mum, honest. But no matter what day of the year Mother's Day is for you, if your mother is as special to you as mine is to me, this year, make sure to select a gift that will make her feel as beautiful as you know she is inside and out.

Forget the chocolates and flowers that you usually send; here are some beauty suggestions that Mum will love, too.

Here's a Mother's Day shopping list you might want to consider before Sunday:

1. How about booking her a day at a spa? Many local spas have special offers and Mother's Day packages available.

2. Mums are always on the go – give yours an energy boost with her own Energy Kit from redenvelope.com. The energy kit contains three bottles of citrus infused body wash, lotion and body splash. $45.

Potatohampton Coming

How do you know summer has come to the Hamptons? When 500 runners race through the potato fields of Sagaponack. It happens every year, like the birds returning to Capistrano, and it's always at the same time, which is Saturday morning on Memorial Day Weekend. You are invited.

The date this year is May 29, and the gun sounds at 9:30 am at the starting line, which is on Ocean Road in Bridgehampton heading south from the Montauk Highway. Registration before the sounding of the gun takes place in the Parrish Hall adjacent to the Bridgehampton Presbyterian Church on Main Street beginning at 8:30. Registration fee is $25. Snack foods (provided by Hain-Celestial) will be available at registration as will various other services, including fruit and beverage service. There will be goodie bags for all participants provided by Shape Magazine, and t-shirts underwritten by Shape. Cancos is another big sponsor. Road maps and other information will also be handed out. And then, ten minutes before race time, registrants will be advised over loudspeakers to walk down a path to the starting line.

This year, the 26th running of the Dan's Papers Potatohampton Minithon will benefit a new charity, the Foundation for the Advancement of Cardiac Therapies (FACT.) Mehmet Oz, M. D., founder and President of FACT will be on hand. Known as "Doc Hollywood," he has a health and fitness show on the Discovery Channel, and among other things has been voted one of the one hundred sexiest men in America by People Magazine. Among those serving on his board are Quincy Jones, Ron Perelman and Ahmet Ertegun.

Also new this year will be an official race timer with state-of-the-art equipment. Your time in running the 10K will be known almost immediately, and it will be able to be seen in context with the other runners directly after the race on the web. The results will also be available almost immediately after the race, published for several hours on the front door of the Bridgehampton Presbyterian Church where the awards ceremony takes place at 11 a.m., (prizes in ten categories) and then afterwards at Dan's Papers a block to the west.

Special thanks to Linda Shapiro, the event manager.

3. Also from redenvelope.com, try a Mother's Escape Bath Set package, $50 containing everything busy Mums need to escape to the bathroom, relax and feel pampered away from the stresses and strains of being Mom.

4. Make Mother's Day last all week with The Best Of Bliss Set, $40. Mum can spend seven days with seven products to pamper seven parts of her overworked, stressed body.

5. Who needs flowers when Mums can smell as sweet as one with Philosophy's Grace Gift Set, $35, containing shower gel, hair conditioner, body scrub and emulsion all infused with a soft floral blossom?

6. Spread a little spring color for Mum's day this year, with some new make-up. Try a sleek combo pack, like Nars Rapture Make-up Artists Palette, $70. Containing a selection of eye, lip and blush colors to brighten any mother's day.

7. Pick up a bottle of Mum's favorite perfume, or pick out a new scent you think she'll like. Going with a Mother's Day flower theme, how about Kenzo's newest scent, Flower, $50-$80. It's infused with violet, vanilla and rose and comes in a unique looking bottle. Or perhaps Dior's new Addict Eau Fraiche, $42-$57 that will put the spring into tired momma's steps with its light fresh spring scent.

8.How about enrolling Mum in a gym class, or a gym membership? Yoga and pilates classes are good to consider, too. A fit Mum is a happy energized Mum, who is ready to take on whatever we throw at her throughout the rest of the year.

9. Accessories are also Mummy pleasers. A nice piece of jewelry, a new purse, or a pretty scarf will boost any outfit and when Mums wear them, they'll think of you. PS...That's supposed to be a good thing.

10. My final, but most important suggestion to keep Mums/Moms happy this year: Mother knows best and don't you forget it.

I Am Jack's Lungs

I am Jack's blackened, tar-stained lungs. I am not Jack's wheezing cough, nor am I his festering tumor. I am an integral part of Jack's respiratory system. The most important part, I'd say. Jack uses me all the time without even thinking about it. I'm located in Jack's chest cavity, protected by his ribcage. My left side is a bit smaller than my right, to leave room for that primadonna the heart. I work with him, but he's just a pretty boy, a facecard, doing all the grunt work, while I make it happen.

I'm a complex organ, converting gas that Jack needs to get rid of into gas that he needs to survive. I keep all the cells supplied with oxygen and get rid of the carbon dioxide waste. When Jack inhales, the diaphragm and intercostal muscles contract and expand the chest cavity. The expansion actually lowers the pressure in his chest cavity below outside air pressure, sending fresh oxygenated air rushing into me and I inflate. When he exhales those same muscles relax and the chest cavity gets smaller, sending the air back out. Then this repeats. And repeats. It repeats somewhere between fifteen and twenty-five times a minute. Jack never even gives me a conscious thought, though. It's enough to make an organ feel a bit neglected.

When I fill with air, it travels through my bronchioles until it reaches the alveoli, which I am filled with. These tiny air sacs contain the pulmonary capillaries where in fractions of a second the carbon dioxide leaves the alveolus and is oxygenated. The now oxygen-enriched blood then returns to the heart where it is sent throughout Jack's body.

That's a little about me, but what about Jack? Jack started smoking because of the failure of anti-smoking ads. He'd never wanted to smoke; in fact, when his grandfather died of lung cancer he swore he never would. But, then he became exposed to the truth, or rather, thetruth.com, and he started polluting me. Any group of such self-righteous, shallow, transparent blow-hards must be one to oppose, he reasoned. And so, Jack started smoking Lucky Strikes just for the habit.

That's where I come in. Well, I was always there, but Jack used to be good to me. He was a runner. I was clean and fit for fight, as the soccer announcers say. When he started smoking, my alveoli became coated with smoke particles and tar build-up, inhibiting the exchange of gases and making my job more difficult. If Jack develops emphysema I will become stiff with fibers and less elastic overall, which increases the workload of the respiratory muscles. His wheezing is not making me feel good about this prospect.

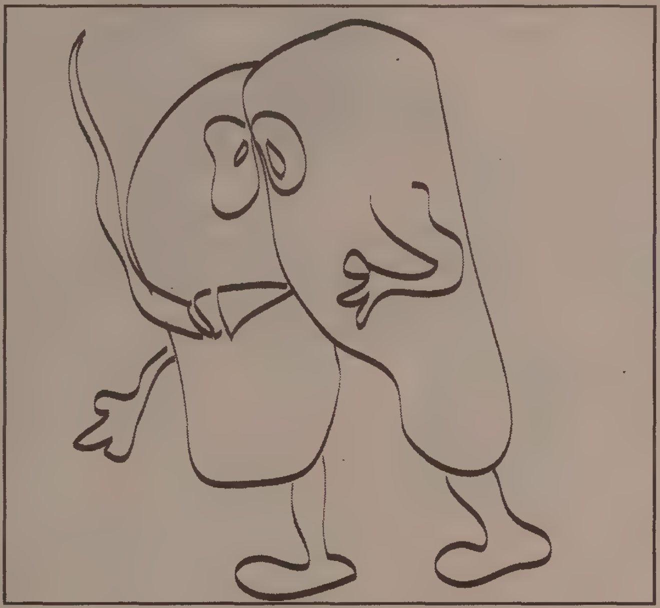

Illustration by John Capone

Most lung cancers grow silently, without any symptoms. Patients with lung cancer often do not develop symptoms until the cancer is at an advanced stage. Surgery, chemotherapy, and radiotherapy have all been utilized in treatment. However, the overall survival of all lung cancer patients has remained essentially unchanged over the past two decades. All bad news for Jack, from where I'm sitting.

Carcinogens in the cigarettes that Jack has been smoking have damaged my cells over time. These cells are the ones that become cancerous. In the United States alone, smoking is thought to cause 445 new cases of lung cancer every day. One of the things I have found about thetruth.com is that it's useful for all sorts of random tidbits. I tried to tell Jack that R.J. Reynolds actually ran a campaign in the early 1990s to get coroners to stop listing tobacco as the cause of death on death certificates. Around that same time, you might remember that R.J. Reynolds also had the 800 number that said "At R.J. Reynolds, we love you," when you called.

A statistic on the thetruth.com states that seventy percent of smokers want to quit, but only five percent actually do each year. I'd like to introduce them to my patented one-step program. Step one: Stop freaking smoking. Step two: There is no step two; you're done. And my name isn't even Bill.

Police Blotter

Nickel and diming their way to a fortune, crooks broke into candy and soda vending machines outside the Whistle Clean Laundry Center on Montauk Highway making off with a load in change. According to a police report, $850 was stolen and the machines sustained $500 in damages.

A gambler-aholic with a knack for choosing stock market "nags" lost it on his broker after losing what he says was a lot of money. The broker, an employee at Franklin Capital Group in East Hampton, reported that a Manhattan client offered to put his lights out permanently if he didn't return $50,000. With lawyer in tow, the hothead turned himself into East Hampton Village Police and was charged with the misdemeanor crime of aggravated harassment in the second degree.

Like they say...Mother knows best. A beer-goggled 40-year-old plowed his car into another at the intersection of Bittersweet Lane and Noyac Road. Following the fender bender he made off like the Energizer bunny and kept on going and going and going. Still addled, he later returned to the scene of the crime with a severely damaged front end. He admitted to Southampton Town Police it was Mom who told him to come back. Immediately arrested and taken to headquarters, Mr. Boozin' & Cruisin' refused to take a chemical test.

Why go down alone when you can bring a friend with you? Two birds of a feather got arrested together by Southampton Village Police at a traffic stop. Similarly charged with possession of a controlled substance in the seventh degree, the first man was also charged with aggravated unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle. His partner in crime was charged additionally with obstructing governmental administration and resisting arrest.

After he got his freak on for fabulous designer shades, a suave 40-something man was apprehended on Newtown Lane after making off with several pairs of high-priced optics from local opticians. Strutting like an extra from Miami Vice in a tasseled leather jacket and silk pants (can't hide behind dark glasses in that get up), he pulled a five-finger discount at Roeloff's Optics slipping out with a pair Robert Marc sunglasses worth $325. Continuing his thieving spree he turned up at Visionary Optiks and pocketed specs from Chanel and Loons. The sunglass caper was solved when store employees identified "sticky fingers" in a line up.

Just hope it wasn't blood pressure medication...a customer at CVS Pharmacy on Pantigo Lane saw red at the checkout. According to police reports, the person in question threw a hissy fit and a half at the counter, apparently expressing terminal displeasure over the price of a prescription before leaving without it.

Getting to the root of the problem, five $50 trees disappeared from in front of a Newlight Avenue house in Water Mill. According to the man who planted them, the arbor bandit entered the property through an electronic gate that can only be accessed with a code. An investigation is ongoing by local authorities.

The high price of beauty cost a 70-year-old woman her freedom. Cops were called in when CVS store employees noticed that she swiped a $7.50 tube of Maybelline eyeliner. Granny-on-the-go returned the make up and was asked to take CVS off her shopping list. During the interview, officers suspected she was under the influence and we're not talking Bobbie Brown. She was warned not to drive, which she paid no heed to and ended up arrested.

Domestic disturbance led a Montauk man to seek cover under the house after punching, hair pulling and kicking a female companion. Like a rat in a trap, the bully was found by police hiding in the belly of the basement and later charged with harassment.

ANGELS IN SOUTHAMPTON

Dear Dan,

Southampton must be very close to heaven because they have so many angels there. On Saturday, April 17, my sister and I had participated in a church sponsored tour of the Hamptons. On the bus, my sister became extremely motion sick and needed to get off the bus as quickly as possible. I asked the bus driver to stop the bus near a shopping center. My sister got off the bus and found a patch of grass and lay down. The bus left us there in the hope that we could catch up at the last stop, which was Duck Walk Winery.

The first angels came in the form of a young couple in a SUV. They stopped and offered help but my sister was not yet able to get into anything that was moving. My sister lay there for about forty-five minutes until she felt a little better. We found a bench in the shopping center and we sat there for a while. Since I did not have lunch, I went into a deli to get something to eat. While I was eating, some people began to talk to us. I began to tell the gentleman about our little adventure and that we were in need of a taxi to take us to the winery. All of a sudden, a woman at the next table offered us a ride, as she was going in that direction. This angel was Andrea Gurvitz, who is with the Southampton Chamber of Commerce. Not only did Ms. Gurvitz take us to the winery; she also gave us a short tour of some of the homes in the area.

When we arrived at the Duck Walk Winery, they could not have been nicer to us. They understood our situation and kept us informed about the arrival of our tour group.

Our thanks go out to the people of Southampton in general and Ms. Gurvits in particular. It is comforting to know that there is a place where people are not afraid to help strangers.

LOX NESS MONSTER

Dear Dan,

My favorite "Dan" story was the miraculous encounter of Southampton residents with an eel under the ice in Lake Agawam. I believed this "shaggy eel" story almost to the very end because our family had a true encounter with an eel in East Hampton years ago. We'd gone to throw crumbs to the ducks at the East Hampton duck pond after enjoying some bagels at the Windmill Deli. My son, David, then only three years old, was so excited that instead of crumbs, he threw a whole bagel into the water. Flustered ducks paddled away. Suddenly, out of the water erupted the most astounding two rows of sharp pointed teeth we'd ever seen. An eel from the muddy depths caught the whole bagel in its jaws and dragged it back down to his home. Today my children are nineteen and thirty-something, but we still remember that wacky eel and his shiny teeth.

The recipe for health and happiness?

Eat right...and enjoy plenty of water.

"Greg and I are both hedonists, basically. We love good food, fine wine, and especially fun people. Our restaurant reflects our personalities, as well as our customers'. To dine with us, you've got to have a big appetite for life.

Not coincidentally, we're both water signs. Which is probably why we both took to the boating lifestyle so easily. It's pure, natural pleasure that's become as vital to our lives as, well, water. And our new friends at Surfside 3 cooked up a very tasty menu of incentives that sealed the deal. When Greg and I can't stand the heat, we get out of the kitchen and right into our Sea Ray Sundancer™. Life just seems better when you add water."
